EMPLOYMENT IN AGRICULTURE

www.Jobriya.in

Anil Gupta

Technology and the internet are probably the first things that come to mind when you think about the future of work for young people; not agriculture or farming. This makes historic sense, as agriculture sheds labor when countries develop. And the traditional ways of producing food do not look particularly attractive. Yet, technology and the internet are also opening up opportunities for agriculture, and urbanization and changing diets are calling for new ways to process, market and consume our foods. So, the question is whether agriculture can provide job opportunities for youth.

There are fewer but better jobs in farming. First, undoubtedly, the share of farming jobs is shrinking. This is normal. As countries urbanize and incomes rise, food expenditures decline as a share of total spending. To help

Price Support Scheme (PSS):

Physical procurement of pulses, oilseeds and copra to be done by Central Nodal Agencies along with state govts. Central Govt to bear procurement expenditure & losses due to procurement up to 25% of production.

Price Deficiency Payment Scheme (PDPS):

Will cover all oilseeds for which MSP is notified. Farmers will get direct payment of the difference between the MSP and the selling price.

produce these other goods and services, farmers take up jobs off the farm. Yet the process can only be sustained if labor productivity in farming increases, through innovation in production as well as better access to markets to sell the surplus.

The current leading example is "Hello Tractor", an innovative platform in Nigeria to co-share tractors using SMS, GPS, and smart sensors. This 'Uber for tractors' has enabled access to smart tractors at the doorstep of small farmers resulting in a significant increase in productivity through mechanization. Though mechanization of agriculture is a good way of ensuring that the sector keeps up with modern times, it comes with its own set of challenges, including access to finance for timely availability of support services and for attaining scale. Temptations to subsidize mechanization should be resisted, ensuring that the process remains compatible with market forces instead, as revealed through factor price ratios (labor over capital and labor over land).

Agriculture dependent jobs- But most new and good jobs are to be generated down and up agricultural stream. With the demand for aggregation, storage, processing, logistics, food preparation, restaurants and other related services becoming increasingly important, many employment opportunities will emerge off the farm, in the larger agri-food systems. Just like Hello Tractor generates high-quality job opportunities for tractor owners, drivers and other providers of financial services, these down stream activities will also open up significant job opportunities. In Southern and Eastern Africa, they are predicted to absorb about one quarter of the labor released by on farm agriculture over the coming decade.

The problem is that from the perspective of employment opportunities, working in the agriculture sector is seen as a drudgery- a non-profitable occupation that has to be avoided. The farmers generally see it purely as a matter of fate and would like to see their children saved from this fate. At

CIVIL SERVICES MAINS EXAM-2018 PREPARING FOR GENERAL STUDIES

www.Jobriya.in

S.B. Singh

The mains GS Papers require thoughtful preparation because a number of skills are tested through a vast range of subjects specified in the syllabus and even beyond it. To begin with, one must keep in mind that the syllabus of GS Papers are not, and can not be self-explanatory. What is implied by this is that the syllabus only provides broad contours of topics and not their entire scope. In other words, the UPSC syllabus is only indicative, and not self-contained. One must develop an insight on the given syllabus and make a detailed syllabus on the basis of contours provided by UPSC. Only this can put the syllabus within a defined boundary or else, one can always hit the syllabus only tangentially and not directly. To do this, the most scientific method is to go through last 10 years GS (MAINS) questions. This way, you will know what are the areas from where questions are being set. For example, look at all the questions asked in previous years on environment. This will help you to know as to which topics on this issue must be prepared. Of course, you will have to factor in new developments on environment also, apart from what has already been asked.

The GS syllabus, set out in four papers, combine 2- 3 disciplines in each paper. For example, GS Paper I is a combination of history (i.e. modern India, post independent India, world history, art and culture), geography, and social issues. One must know the ratio in which questions are asked from each section, or else, one can devote more time on minor parts of the syllabus and less on major topics. Secondly, one must note that the GS syllabus has static, dynamic and deliberative aspects. The static aspects are history, culture, geographical concepts etc. The dynamic aspects are social issues, polity, international relations, Science/Technology etc. The deliberative aspects are mostly in the ethics paper where you have to deliberate on issues relating to ethics, values, morality, conduct etc. These GS aspects can be prepared by applying the following approach:

Static part: Static parts can be best approached by reading standard text books. The foundational books are NCERT publications on history, geography, economics etc. But, you need to graduate to higher higher text books after mastering NCERT books. For each static area, a suggestive list is provided at the end in this article.

Dynamic part: Dynamic part is all about current issues which keeps evolving on day to day basis. The dynamic aspects constitute a very large part of GS and require very careful preparation. One should locate every important topic in the news and ponder over the kind of questions that can be set on that issue. For example, the BLASPHEMY LAW passed by Punjab assembly, should make you ponder over these things: what is blasphemy, what is the purpose of this law, what is its criticism, what has been the experience of such laws in our neighbouring Pakistan, and finally, your own assessment of this law. This is what I call a 360 degree approach to a dynamic topic, which means that all aspects have been given due consideration during your reading of the issue and making brief notes. For dynamic aspects, one must read a variety of newspapers and journals. I have observed a trend among the aspirants not to read diverse newspapers and journals. They use conventional wisdom and restrict their reading habits to only a particular newspaper and few journals, mostly. No doubt these are quite informative sources. But one must go beyond these. otherwise you will have a very restrictive preparation base.

Deliberative part: This is that part of the GS syllabus which provoke your own thoughts based on real life experiences. Mostly, such deliberative questions are asked in GS Paper IV, i.e. Ethics. No text book knowledge will help you to frame your answers on such questions. What can really help you is to relate and reflect on your own observations and experiences to answer such questions. For this, you have to cultivate habits of thinking and deliberating. For example, if a question in ethics is: why laws do not attract grater compliance in india, you will have to ponder over it. Compliance of law depends on internalisation of its inherent values and not the provisions of the law per se. We have poor compliance of dowry law, anti corruption laws, or traffic laws because a large section of society has not internalised their values. This is what I imply by deliberative types of questions.

GS PAPER I: This paper is the lengthiest of all the four papers and carries a vast static syllabus. UPSC has only given a brief outline of the syllabus and there is a need to broaden the syllabus by self efforts. For modern India, one must cover the national movement, which shaped up after 1885, its various phases, Gandhian era, socialist and revolutionary approaches to the movement etc. The political, economic and social thoughts of leading national leaders like Gandhi, Nehru, Patel, Ambedkar, Tilak, Gokhale etc. must be covered. Also, questions are set on some important viceroys, like, Dalhousie, Cornwallis, Ripon, Curzon etc. So, even this needs to be looked into. Then, the socio-religious movements, economic policies, educational policies, administrative policies of the British need to be covered.

As regards post modern India, all the major developments in agriculture, industry, science and tech, foreign policy, the task of nation building etc. should be covered. For world history, the major revolutions, world wars and their consequences deserve special attention. For geography, the current issues will be asked in the exam.

Art and Culture: Its true significance is often not realised by candidates. It is narrowly understood only in terms of art forms. Art forms like dance, painting, sculpture, etc. do come under its scope, but there is much more to be studied on what is known as India's rich culture. According to Romila Thapar, a great historian, every society has its culture, viz; the pattern of how the people of that society live. Culture includes: environment, technology, political economy, religious mythology, and social structures. Civilisation can be similarly defined as high culture evidenced in society. The main aspects of civilisation are: philosophy, religious texts, literary forms, poetry, drama, epics, aesthetic values expressed in artistic forms such as sculpture, painting, architecture, music, astronomy, mathematics, medicine etc. If one goes back to last years' questions, one would find questions relating to these broad subjects of culture. For example, a question was asked on Sangam literature some years back which comes under this definition. Therefore, it is extremely important for the aspirants to understand the diverse canvas of art and culture and cover the areas mentioned above.

World History: Though the syllabus of world history is exhaustive, one can afford to go for a selective preparation of this area because only one or two questions will be asked from this section. The major revolutions, viz; French, Russian, Industrial revolutions, the two world wars, and the decolonisation processes in Asia and Africa should be thoroughly prepared.

GS PAPER II. This paper is all about the main constitutional provisions, the issues arising in our political system, and governance issues. Secondly, India's foreign policy engagements with its neighbours, great powers and multilateral organisations will form part of what is known as international relations. Questions on polity and governance constitute the bulk of this paper.

EMPLOYMENT IN ...

best, they see the farm as a source of mere survival, something that keeps them alive. No profession can grow if this is the perception of most of its practitioners.

If agriculture is shown to be profitable, the cream of youth will want to get into it. Unless agriculture becomes an "industry", it will not be profitable. The industrial culture must come to the agriculture practice. This industrial culture consists of having clear specifications for the inputs, the process and the outputs; there must be financial discipline and cost consciousness; planning and rational decision making and finally, an awareness of performance indices - one must compare one's performance with industry standards and strive to better them.

In my opinion, the performance indices, the accounts, including the stock and inventory, the profit and loss- these are all essential data components. Without them, it is not possible to ascertain the performance of the agriculture business. Yet, we ignore the lack of this basic facility. For instance, there is no conventional method or practice for weighing the fodder which otherwise is an important part of the industry. It is an equally important part of agriculture, but the facilities are lacking on every farm. It is a pre-requisite in the development of the agriculture sector.

The following observations from the NITI Aayog Report on "Skill Development and Productivity of the Workforce" are relevant in this regard:

(i) The structural transition from agricultural to non-agricultural sector has seen a rapid decline in the contribution of farm sector to the GDP, having reduced to

16 per cent, but a very slow decline in the workforce participation level, which stands at 48 per cent. This has resulted in a low level of productivity in the agricultural sector. The nature of jobs created is informal (91 per cent of the workforce) and the status of employment is self-employed. Further, there is a high degree of unemployment among the youth due to aspirational mismatch or skill mismatch, declining participation of females in the labour force, and an economic environment wherein jobs created are not commensurate with economic growth. The distribution of the workforce by sector and status of employment shows that in the agriculture sector, where almost 32 per cent are self-employed, the majority is operating as own-account worker or unpaid helper; (ii) Casual labour in agriculture is just 17 per cent; (iii) In India, 70 per cent of the labour force resides in rural areas and depends on low productive agricultural activity, where there is huge under-employment, leading to low level of productivity. The high proportion of poverty-stricken women living in India is due to their high concentration in low productivity work.

(iv) There is a need to include subjects introducing school students to the agriculture sector in the curriculum for secondary education, so that the youth are at least aware of working opportunities in this sector.

(v) In the rural setting, efforts are being made through MGNREGA to coordinate training provision with priorities set for rural development and to promote such non-farm rural activities which help in generating rural income and manage distress arising out of the seasonal fluctuations in the agricultural sector. Also, improved production practices through use of new technologies, alternative crops and labour intensive crops can have positive income and employment effect in small land holdings.

Similarly, if we talk about disguised unemployment, it exists in a majority of rural households engaged in agriculture. Disguised Unemployment exists where part of the labor force is either left without work or is working in a redundant manner, where worker productivity is essentially zero. It is unemployment that does not affect aggregate output. An economy demonstrates disguised unemployment when productivity is low and too many workers are filling too few jobs. Such labour force should be convinced to move from direct labour to ancillary activities like food processing.

Even the Indian Government has started to give more importance to the allied activities of agriculture. The following are certain relevant points from a notification issued by the Reserve Bank of India on "Revised guidelines on lending to Priority Sector for Primary (Urban) Co-operative Banks (UCBs)":

(i) Bank loans to food and agro processing units will form part of Agriculture. (ii) The present distinction between direct and indirect agriculture is dispensed with. Instead, the lending to agriculture sector has been re-defined to include (i) Farm Credit (which will include short-term crop loans and medium / long-term credit to farmers) (ii) Agriculture Infrastructure and (iii) Ancillary Activities.

(iii) Ancillary activities include:

a) Loans for setting up of Agriclincs and Agribusiness Centres.

b) Loans for Food and agro-processing up to an aggregate sanctioned limit of 100 crore per borrower from the banking system.

(iv) Small and marginal farmers will include the following:

- ♦ Farmers with landholding of up to 1 hectare are considered as Marginal Farmers.

- ♦ Farmers with a land holding of more than 1 hectare and up to 2 hectares are considered as Small Farmers.

- ♦ Landless agricultural labourers, tenant farmers, oral lessees and share-croppers

If we talk about the differences between farmers in the global context, there are lots of differences. Let us take the example of India and US. There are major differences between the lifestyles of farmers of India and US. They have nothing in common, especially if you are referring to the very large number of subsistence farmers in India. The following are certain basic differences between Indian farmers and American farmers:

(i) There are essentially no subsistence farmers in the U.S.

(ii) Even those farmers in the U.S. that deliberately eschew modern machinery typically use a higher level of technology than the typical Indian farmer. They also farm more efficiently; Indian fields and farm holdings are, in general, too small to be farmed efficiently.

(iii) The net result is that farmers in India have a standard of living which parallels their extremely low productivity

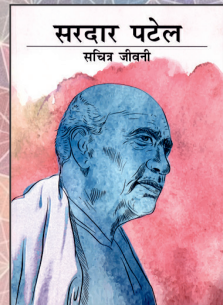

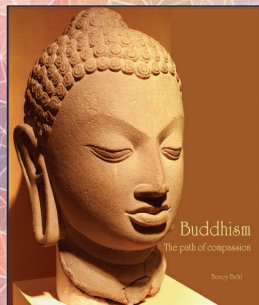

(iv) Indian farms are small, whereas US farms are large.

In a nutshell, technological improvements and innovations like "Hello Tractor" in Nigeria should be focused upon. The disguised unemployment should be sincerely addressed by shifting them to ancillary and allied activities of agriculture like food processing, fishery, Kutir Udyog like making of papads, achaars, chatnis etc.
