The UN Environment Programme (UNEP) every year organizes events for World Environment Day (WED), which encourages worldwide awareness and action for the protection of environment. WED is celebrated on 5 June in over 100 countries since the first day of Stockholm conference. In 2019, China will host the global World Environment Day celebrations on the theme, 'Air Pollution'.

World Environment Day (WED) is celebrated on the 5th of June every year, and is the United Nation's principal vehicle for encouraging awareness and action for the protection of our environment. First held in 1974, it has been a flagship campaign for raising awareness on emerging environmental issues from marine pollution, human overpopulation, and global warming, to sustainable consumption and wildlife crime. WED has grown to become a global platform for public outreach, with participation from over 143 countries annually. Each year, WED has a new theme that major corporations, NGOs, communities, governments and celebrities worldwide adopt to advocate environmental causes.

World Environment Day was established by the UN General Assembly in 1972 on the first day of the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment, resulting from discussions on the integration of human interactions and the environment. Two years later, in 1974 the first WED was held with the theme "Only One Earth". Even though WED celebration has been held annually since 1974, in 1987 the idea for rotating the center of these activities through selecting different host countries began.

World Environment Day is to be held on Wednesday June 5th 2019, and is on June 5th every year. It isn’t a public holiday; it is an environmental awareness day, run by the United Nations. It is sometimes also unofficially called Eco Day or Environment Day. The aim of the Day is to raise awareness of the environment and specific environmental issues.

On 15 March 2019, the head of Chinese delegation, Zhao Yingmin, Vice Minister of Ecology and Environment, and Joyce Msuya, Acting Head of UN Environment, jointly announced at Nairobi that China will host the global World Environment Day celebrations on 5 June 2019 with a theme of air pollution.

Themes

Since last five decades, World Environment Day has been raising awareness, supporting action, and driving change. Here is a glimpse of themes and recent history of last WEDs:

In 2019, China will host the global World Environment Day celebrations on the theme, 'Air Pollution'.

2018

The theme for 2018 is "Beat Plastic Pollution". The host nation is India. By choosing this Theme, it is aimed that people may strive to change their everyday lives to reduce the heavy burden of plastic pollution. People should be free from the Environment is defined as the physical surrounding of organisms including human beings of which they are a part and on which they are dependent for their activities like physiological functioning, production and consumption. In other words, everything that surrounds or affects an organism during its life time is collectively known as its environment. It is the source of oxygen, food, habitat, energy, water and other needs for all organisms. It comprises of living (biotic) as well as non-living (abiotic) components.

I. Autotrophs or Producers:

The word ‘autotroph’ comes from the root words ‘auto’ for self and ‘troph’ for food. Thus, autotrophs are those organisms that can produce their own food. They prepare their food using materials from inorganic sources (abiotic components). However, they feed themselves without the assistance of any other organisms. Autotrophs are also called as ‘producers’. They form the base of energy pyramid in an ecosystem and provide food to all the heterotrophs need to exist.

Types of Autotrophs:

a) Phototrophs: These organisms get the energy from sunlight to make organic materials. This set of organisms perform a process called photosynthesis in which photons from the Sun are captured and used to perform food. Photoautotrophs include plants, green algae, and bacteria. They make organic compounds and fuels that give support to heterotrophs including human beings. During the process of photosynthesis, these organisms take carbon from the atmosphere, mainly from CO2, and use it to make sugars and other molecules that store the Sun’s energy in their molecular bonds. This process releases molecules of oxygen that is vital for our survival. It is believed that free oxygen was not present in Earth’s atmosphere until after photoautotrophs became common in Earth’s seas. The release of large amounts of free oxygen into Earth’s atmosphere by photoautotrophs paved the way for large animals, like ourselves. Photoautotrophs are also credited for the Earth’s Ozone layer as some of the oxygen produced by them created the ozone layer, which protects life on the planet from the Sun’s UV light.

After knowing the abiotic and biotic components of environment, we should now discuss another important concept and that is Ecology.

Ecology
Ecology is the scientific study of the relations that living organisms have with respect to each other and their natural/physical environment. It deals with the ways in which organisms are shaped by their environment, how they make use of environmental resources. It helps us understand how the world works. It provides useful evidence on the interdependence between people and the natural world and, as well the consequences of human activity on the environment. There are seven specific levels in the ecology that exist, sometimes discretely and sometimes with overlap. These levels are organism, population, community, ecosystem, biome and biosphere. At each level, these units have a specific structure and function.

Organism
They make the basic unit of study in ecology. Organisms are living beings that have the ability to act or function independently, e.g. plant, animal, etc. The organisms of the similar type have the potential for interbreeding, and produce fertile offspring, which are called species. An organism is fully adapted to its environment.

Population
A population is a group of individuals of the same species, inhabiting a geographical area, and functioning as a unit of biotic community. A population’s geographic reach has limits, or bounds, established by the physical limits that the species can tolerate, such as temperature or aridity, and by the encroachment of other species. Population density is the relation between the number of individuals of a population and the area they occupy.

Community
A community is the set of all populations that inhabit a certain area. It is not a rigid or fixed structure. Communities can have different sizes and boundaries. These are often identified with some difficulty. For example, a forest of trees and undergrowth plants, inhabited by animals and rooted in soil containing bacteria and fungi, constitutes a community.

Ecosystem
Ecosystem is a community of plants and animals interacting with each other in a given area, and also with their non-living environments. An ecosystem is a complex set of relationships among the living resources, habitats and residents of an area. It includes plants, trees, animals, fish, birds, micro-organism, water, soil and people. Ecosystem vary greatly in size and elements that make them but each is a functioning unit of nature. Everything that lives in an ecosystem is dependent on the other species and elements that are also part of that ecological community. If one part of an ecosystem is damaged or disappears, it has an impact on everything else. There are essentially two kinds of ecosystems; Aquatic and Terrestrial. These two can be further divided into various sub-categories like desert ecosystem, forest ecosystem, grassland ecosystem, mountain ecosystem, marine ecosystem, freshwater ecosystem.

Biome
A Biome is a large ecological area on the earth’s surface, with flora (plants) and fauna (animals) adapting to their environment. Biomes are often defined by abiotic factors such as temperature, climate, relief, geology, soils and vegetation. A biome, in a way, may look like a massive ecosystem but they are not. A biome may be home to many units of ecosystems. There are some major categories of biomes on earth.

The campaign "Think.Eat.Save." aimed to bring about awareness in countries with lifestyles that result in a large quantity of food, which, if conserved, would help mitigate negative impacts. The main international celebrations of the WED 2007 were held in the city of Tromsø, Arctic Circle, a city north of the Arctic Circle.

The topic for WED 2006 was "Deserts and Desertification" and the slogan was "Don’t desert deserts". The slogan emphasised the importance of protecting drylands. The main international celebrations of the World Environment Day 2006 were held in Algeria.

2005
The theme for the 2005 World Environment Day was "Green Cities" and the slogan was "Plan for the Planet!"

World Environment Day (WED) was established in 1992 but first held in 1974, which shows that concern about the environment goes back several decades at least. 143 countries take part in World Environment Day, and the day focuses on environmental concerns ranging from pollution to global warming and sustainable food production to protection of wildlife.

World Environment Day can be celebrated in many ways, activities such as clean-ups are popular and will be prominent this year, also concerts, conventions and parades, tree planting, and lectures. Promotional materials for the day tend to be created using natural environmental colours.

Participants of WED include NGOs, governments, communities, individuals, charities, organizations and celebrities, and together they raise awareness of environmental issues. Each year a country or Nation hosts WED. World Environment Day has had its own anthem since 2013.

World Environment Day Anthem
An Earth Anthem penned by poet Abhay K is sung to celebrate World Environment Day. Our cosmic ocean, cosmic blue Planet, the most beautiful planet in the universe, the all the oceans unite we stand as flora and fauna.RAND, we stand as species of one earth different cultures, beliefs and ways. We are humans, the earth is our home all the people and the nations of the world. WED 2019 theme: Air Pollution
Air pollution occurs when harmful or excessive quantities of substances including gases, particles, and biological molecules are introduced into Earth’s atmosphere. It may cause diseases, allergies, and even death to humans; it may also cause harm to other living organisms, diminish food crops, and may damage the natural or built environment. Both human activity and natural processes can generate air pollution.

Indoor air pollution and poor urban air quality are listed as two of the world’s worst toxic pollution problems in the 2008 Blacksmith Institute World’s Worst Polluted Places report. According to the 2014 World Health Organization report, air pollution in 2012 caused the deaths of around 7 million people worldwide, an estimate roughly echoed by one from the International Energy Agency. An air pollutant is a material in the air that can have adverse effects on humans and the ecosystem. The substance can be solid particles, liquid droplets, or gases. A pollutant can be of natural origin or man-made. Pollution classified as primary or secondary Primary pollutants are usually produced by processes such as ash from a volcanic eruption. Other examples include carbon monoxide gas from motor exhausts and other industrial gases released from the factories. Secondary pollutants are not emitted directly. Rather, they form in the air when primary pollutants react or interact. Ground level ozone is a prominent example of secondary pollutants. Some pollutants may be both primary and secondary: they are both emitted directly and formed from other primary pollutants.

Air pollution is a mixture of natural and man-made substances in the air we breathe. It is typically separated into two categories:

Outdoor air pollution

- In 2012, air pollution caused premature deaths on average of 1 year in Europe, and was a significant risk factor for a number of pollution-related diseases, including respiratory infections, heart disease, COPD, stroke and lung cancer. The health effects caused by air pollution may include difficulty in breathing, wheezing, coughing, asthma and worsening of existing respiratory and cardiac conditions. These effects can result in increased medication use, increased doctor or emergency department visits, more hospital admissions and premature death. The human health effects of poor air quality are far reaching, but principally affect the body’s respiratory system and the cardiovascular system. Individual reactions to air pollutants depend on the type of pollutant a person is exposed to, the degree of exposure, and the individual’s health status and genetics. The most common sources of air pollution include particulates, ozone, nitrogen dioxide, and sulphur dioxide. Children aged less than five years that live in developing countries are the most vulnerable population in terms of total deaths attributable to indoor and outdoor air pollution.

Reduction efforts

Various air pollution control technologies and strategies are available to reduce air pollution. At its most basic level, land-use planning is likely to involve zoning and transport infrastructure planning. In most developed countries, land-use planning is an important part of social policy, ensuring that land is used efficiently for the benefit of the wider economy and population, as well as to protect the environment. Because a large share of air pollution is caused by combustion of fossil fuels such as coal and oil, the reduction of these fuels can reduce air pollution drastically. Most effective is the switch to clean power sources such as wind power, solar power, hydro power which don’t cause air pollution. Efforts to reduce pollution from mobile sources includes primary regulation (many developing countries have permissive regulations), expanding regulation to new sources (such as cruise and transport ships, farm equipment, and small gas-powered equipment such as string trimmers, chainsaws, and snowmobiles), increased fuel efficiency (such as through the use of hybrid vehicles), conversion to cleaner fuels or conversion to electric vehicles.

Titanium dioxide has been researched for its ability to reduce air pollution. Ultraviolet light will release free electrons from material, thereby creating free radicals, which break up VOCs and NOx gases. One form is superhydrospheric.
