WATER, ENERGY & FOOD
ISSUES AND POLICY DIMENSIONS

Prem Chand & Sulakshana Rao

The UN sustainable development agenda of Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) gives a clear recognition that ensuring availability and sustainable management of water for all by 2030 is essential for achieving development ambitions (SDG 6). A large number of people are still living without safe water - their households, schools, workplaces, farms and factories have been struggling to get their share of water.

In India, water scarcity is undoubtedly a long-standing issue considering its use for agriculture as well as for basic needs. World Resource Institute (WRI) estimated that 54 per cent of the country’s area faces extreme water stress. Agricultural sector is responsible for 78 per cent of water use in the country (CWC, 2014). With the increasing population, the total demand for food grains will increase to 375 metric tons. With increase in per capita income, shift in consumption pattern towards high water demanding crops, over-exploitation of groundwater is imminent. Presently, there are over 20 million wells pumping water with free power supply, subsidised by the Government. This has aggravated the issue of declining water table (0.4 m per year), while encouraging wastage of water in many states. The existing cropping pattern does not ensure the sustainable use of water resources. The mounting pressure on water resources justifies that sustainable use of water resources is fundamental priority in Indian agriculture. What, Where and How to produce?

The water-food-energy nexus is crucial in the sustainability forefront. The pervasive linkages between these domains demand a deliberate approach to ensure sustainable agricultural production without compromising water and food security. Agriculture in itself is resource-consuming. The clear challenge is to produce higher yield per unit of natural resource invested. Water being the most limiting factor in agriculture, the rule of thumb for sustainability is growing more food per drop. Rice and wheat are important from food security point of view. However, these two crops along with sugarcane consume more than 80 per cent of water available for irrigation in the country. The alarming increase of water table depth, mainly in areas with intensive rice-wheat cropping system during recent years has questioned the sustainability of the traditional rice-wheat system. Extensive rice-wheat system in traditional belts of Punjab and Haryana has not only led to reduction in agricultural output but also to salinity issues in the ground water aquifers, shortage of potable water, leading to extensive socio-economic stress (Mac Donald et al., 2016; Rodel et al., 2009). Traditional rice producing belts are environmentally unsustainable, as depicted by high water footprints. Studies projected that if paddy-wheat cycle continues, the water use, such as Central Punjab will fall below 70 feet in 66 per cent area, below 100 feet in 34 per cent area and below 130 feet in 7 per cent area (Humphreys et al., 2010, Sidhu et al., 2010). Though the late rice sowing from

The one question that you face soon after you start your school is ‘What do you want to be when you grow up?’ You would invariably end up saying Doctor, Techie, and Pilot just to end speculation there. But the misery doesn’t end there. The question continues to haunt you every after you have chosen your stream of study in college. While some convert their choice of subject into serious career options, there are many others who completely deviate from their academics choosing an altogether new path.

Now that the results are out many students have passed their CBSE and ICSE Board examinations with flying colors and are now rejoicing, there however are those who have not scored as per their expectations, is it time for them to descend into gloom? Well the answer is an emphatic ‘NO’.

Do you enjoy expressing your creativity, and being innovative in your spare time? With new businesses coming up and the marketplace becoming more competitive by the day, the advancement of an individual (and the company) rests on the ability to think and act creatively.

Wide array of promising careers that allow you to utilize your creative abilities, and even get paid well!

1. Design: This is a broad term, can be found in various fields from Fashion, art to Technology and manufacturing. Whatever we see or wear has been designed by someone else. In general, a designer need to be creative, should have an eye for detail, and be spatially inclined (individual with a high aptitude for identifying 2-D/3-D structures).

Career Opportunities in Design
There are specific fields of design one can work in, depending on one’s expertise, such as Fashion Design, Graphic Design, Cartoon Design, Product Design, Apparel Design, etc.

WATER- ENERGY

May to June) implemented by the Government of Punjab was a vital policy initiative, it shortened the window between the Kharki rice and Rabi wheat. This policy initiative resulted in massive amount crop residue burning, leading to excessive environmental damage to Punjab, Haryana and neighbouring cities like Delhi.

The high water foot prints of rice and wheat in traditional belts streamlines the much needed water availability based cropping pattern re-alignment across the zones. Dhawan (2017) also emphasised that India must review its current trend of producing water intensive crops, such as sugarcane and rice in water scarce areas. Shift of rice cultivation from Punjab to Eastern India may reduce the burden on fresh water sources to a certain extent. Eastern India with 2-3 times more rainfall as compared to Punjab. As per the study by NABARD, the irrigation, water productivity of rice and wheat is relatively higher in eastern states. The region also holds unexploited quality ground water aquifers and irrigations sources required for water-guzzling crops. Crop residue management is also an issue since the climatic factors of eastern India is also favourable for mushroom cultivation, which uses straw as its growth substrate.

The methods of cultivation also play a crucial role in sustainable cultivation. Technology assisted cultivation in the form of seed varieties or method of sowing or improved cultivation practices is advocated for long term sustainability. For example: practices like direct seeding, alternate wetting and drying in rice, mulching incrops, raised bed cultivation in soybean help in reducing both carbon and water footprint to a great extent. Studies conducted by CIMMYT shows that improved cultivation practice like intermittent flooding instead of continuous flooding reduces the global warming potential from 3500 kg CO2 ha-1 to 900 kg CO2 ha-1 (Jain et al., 2013, Pathak et al., 2014). Besides higher irrigation efficiency (upto 75% in case of sprinkler and upto 90% in drip system as compared to 40% of surface system), sprinkler and drip irrigation systems have mitigation potential of 1276 kg CO2e/ha/year (Sapkota et al., 2019). Similarly, practices like conservation agriculture in rice- wheat system reduces its global warming potential from 6300 kg CO2 ha-1 (traditional) to 4900 kg CO2 ha-1. Conservation agriculture in maize reduces the energy and irrigation water by 48% and 71% respectively as compared to traditional cultivation. Adoption of zero tillage has a mitigation potential of 1796 kg CO2e/ha/year. Scientific residue management instead of crop residue burning mitigates 522 kg CO2e/ha/year of GHG (Sapkota et al., 2019).

Another focal point should be the post- harvest food wastage. Every unit of food wasted leads to excess carbon and water foot print to produce same unit of food for consumption. An estimate provided by Indian Council of Agricultural Research showed that an annual value of harvest and post-harvest losses of major agricultural produces at the national level was to the order of Rs. 92,651 crore, calculated using production data of 2012-13 at 2014 wholesale prices (Gol, 2016). However, in developing countries like India, food loss occurs at early stages of food value chain associated with poor infrastructure, storage and transport facilities.

Dietary diversification is also important as crop diversification. NITI Aayog report reveals that India is self-sufficient in food with an annual production of 750 million tonnes with a per capita availability of 1.6 kg/day. However, 45 per cent of the dietary consumption is comprised of cereals, with water guzzling crop such as rice (Singh et al., 2017). Nutrition-wise, coarse grains like ragi, jowar, and maize that have energy and nutritive value in line with that of major cereals like rice and wheat. These nutri-cereals require much less water as compared to rice, wheat and sugarcane. The food subsidies provided to the consumers through (PDS, mid-day meal) are focused on these major cereals.

Sustainable policies

Food production of the country is now sufficient to feed the entire population. The food subsidies management is currently a rising issue. Hence, the policy focus on sustainable agriculture while analysing the impact of activity on natural resources and ecosystem as a whole is necessary. Agricultural cropping pattern should be rearranged based on resource availability and foot prints. Current reliance on cropping pattern water footprint is also associated with the support on pricing aspect (both input and output pricing) and assured procurement and withdrawal of input subsidies (water and power) in the over-exploited regions and strengthening the procurement system in the eastern regions is recommended to reduce the burden in the north-western belt. Re-alignment of environmental footprints (water and carbon) in determination of MSP may be one way of addressing the sustainability issue. Water productive crops such as pulses, linseed and mustard should be advocated in water stressed belts. Strengthening of post- harvest management, crop-wise infrastructure, storage and logistic facilities for all farmer size group categories to minimise food wastage need be considered. On the consumption side,food diversity in terms of inclusion of nutri-cereals with same economic potential and less water foot print need to be promoted. The export policy need be framed to minimise the virtual water export or export of water in the form of agricultural commodities.
