GLOBAL WARMING AND CLIMATE CHANGE

Dr. Priyanka Sharma

Today we have the necessary technology, resources and capacity to address every issue on the planet. Never before in the history of mankind, have human beings been as capable as we are today. We are living in a time when we have to think of protecting and conserving all that has been bestowed on us. It was the planet that always took care of us but now we have to think and act to protect it.

The beginning of industrial revolution triggered the sudden increase in carbon dioxide (CO₂) concentration in the atmosphere. One of the key gases is CO₂; it comprises more than 75% of the gases that cause the temperature change. And unlike the other greenhouse gases (GHGs), it can last for almost 50-200 years, accumulating in the air above and adding to the greenhouse effect. Economists have concluded that there is a direct correlation between the economic development and GHGs, as least if the world follows the current pattern of economic development.

Global Warming is literally the warming of our planet caused by a steadily thickening blanket of gases such as CO₂ and air pollutants that is building up in the atmosphere. This blanket of hot-house gases traps the sun’s heat and causing the planet to warm up. In the worst case scenario, Global Warming would make large areas of the world uninhabitable and cause massive food and water shortages, sparking wide spread migration and war.

Since the coming of Industrial Revolution and the modernisation of many of the world’s societies, the rate at which these energy resources have been consumed has risen dramatically and continued to do so. In the past three decades alone, world energy consumption has nearly tripled, and most of that energy still is provided by fossil fuels. These resources are being depleted so rapidly that many observers predict the complete exhaustion of specific fuels within the foreseeable future. For example, some estimates claim that half of all the recoverable oil in the world will have been used up by as early as 1997 and no later than the year 2017.

The nations of the world consumed a total of nearly 66 million barrels (about 2.77 billion gallons) of petroleum per day in 1990, a 40% increase from 1970 rates. Petroleum represents about one-third of the total current industrial energy consumption in the United States, although, since 1970, all energy-use sectors except transportation have moved away from petroleum and other fossil fuels toward increased use of electricity. However, according to U.S. Department of Energy projections, petroleum consumption will grow, with an increasing amount of that oil coming from foreign sources.

As of 1992, 364 commercial nuclear-powered reactors were in operation around the world, producing a total of

CAREER IN SCHOOL TEACHING

Shweta Saras

Teacher’s Day is celebrated across India on September 5 every year to mark the birth anniversary of Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, the former President of India, who was a scholar, statesman and a respected teacher who shaped many minds and served the nation. On this occasion, the country salutes the dedication and commitment of all teachers, whose role in nation building is paramount. Teachers have been revered as Guru in Indian culture since the ancient times. It has always been a highly respected profession. Former President APJ Abdul Kalam had once said, “Teaching is a very noble profession that shapes the character, caliber, and future of an individual. If the people remember me as a good teacher that will be the biggest honour for me.” In the words of the great philosopher Aristotle, “Teachers, who educate children, deserve more honor than parents, who merely gave them birth; for the latter provided mere life, while the former ensured a good life.” The value of human wealth of a nation largely depends upon the skills and abilities of its teachers. This article describes about career in school teaching.

Levels in School Teaching

The school system in India has four levels: lower primary, upper primary, high and higher secondary. The lower primary school is divided into five “standards”, upper primary school into two, high school into three and higher secondary into two. Accordingly, there are following categories of School Teachers:

Pre-Primary Teachers: Pre-primary education is very important for the development of young children before they enter formal school. It is the first step towards entering the world of knowledge as well as a healthy and purposeful life. Pre-primary education also known as kindergarten, play school or nursery helps children become more independent and confident as well as promoting the all round development of the children. Various types of pre primary schools, also known as kindergarten, play school or nursery are available in India and more children are now attending pre-schools.

Job Profile

The job responsibilities of a Pre School Teacher include nurturing and developing knowledge, abilities and social skills of children and helping to prepare them for primary school education by employing a variety of educational techniques like storytelling, pictures, rhyming, educational play, media etc. They help children improve their cognitive skills, social competencies and build self-esteem. So, if you love the Continued from page 1 Since the advent of the Modern Age and the industrialisation of the world’s societies, the earth’s natural ability to cleanse itself of atmospheric pollutants has been strained to the point of collapse. Each year, developed and developing countries pour millions of tons of toxic pollutants into the air in the course of heating, cooling and powering the economies that sustain the social well-being of their populations and each year and disgorge rapidly growing amounts of the same fossil fuel and chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) emissions into the atmosphere as they industrialise and modernise in an effort to improve their own population’s levels of well being. Ironically, one of the net results of this attempted global upgrading of human societal life has been the global downgrading of the physical environment and, ultimately, of human societal life as well. The atmosphere that is meant to sustain us is now unhealther, warmer, and thinner than at any previous point in recorded history.

Modern industrial society can not sustain itself without massive supplies of energy. Worldwide consumption of non-renewable energy resources has grown at a staggering pace. By the beginning of twentieth century, coal was the world’s principal source of power and oil was just coming into use. Only three generations later, the United States gets three-fourths of its energy from petroleum. Western Europe and Japan get about two-thirds of their power from that source, and the communist countries get about two-fifths of theirs. The increasing use of non-renewable energy reserves has made possible an enormous growth in energy consumption. From 1950 to 1973, world energy consumption rose about 7% a year. In the 10 years between 1960 and 1970, consumption of the power in the United States increased by almost two-thirds. About 40% of this power goes directly to industrial production. The remainder is used for heating, lighting and transportation, as well as for running an array of home conveniences ranging from refrigerators and air-conditioners to electric toothbrushes. Some capitalist nations have economic and political systems that help wealthy and powerful people exploit the poor and the weak. When these systems are applied to the environment, the natural wealth of the people as a whole is destroyed in the interest of the few. As the less developing nations are trying to industrialise, they find that the cheap energy and raw materials that helped the wealthy nations to develop are gone.

Since the beginning of the Industrial Revolution, human activity has pumped steadily more carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. Most was quietly absorbed by the oceans, whose immense ‘sink’ capacity meant that 170 years were needed for levels to increase from pre-industrial 280 parts per million to 300 (inset graph). But the vast increase in fuel-burning since 1850 (inset graph) has overwhelmed even the oceanic sink. Atmospheric concentrations are now rising almost as steeply as carbon dioxide emissions themselves.

FUTURE PROJECTIONS The earth’s surface is warming. The temperature increase since the late 1800s may seem small, but the impact on people is likely to be profound. The impact will be even greater as temperatures continue rising, by as much as 6.4 C by 2100. Projected changes in the atmospheric concentrations of green-house gases and aerosols are projected to result in increase in global temperatures between 1990-2100 of 1.1 to 6.4 C, with land areas warming more than the oceans, and high latitudes warming more than the tropics. Globally averaged warming is projected to increase, but with increases and decreases in particular regions, accompanied by more intense precipitation events over major regions of the world, and global mean sea-level is projected to rise by up to 1 meter, between 1990-2100, even without considering a contribution from melting of Greenland ice-sheets. The incidence of extreme weather events is projected to increase—hot days, floods and droughts. A rise in earth’s temperatures can in turn root to other alterations in the ecology, including and increasing sea level and modification of the distribution of the vegetation and pattern of rainfall. There modifications may boost the occurrence and concentration of severe climate events, such as floods, famines, heat waves, tornadoes and hurricanes. Other consequences may comprise of higher or lower agricultural outputs, glaciers melting, lesser summer stream flows, genus extinctions and rise in the ranges of disease vectors. As an effect of global warming various new diseases have emerged lately. These diseases are occurring frequently, due to the increase in earth’s average temperature. Since the bacteria can survive better in elevated temperatures and even multiplies faster when the conditions are favourable. The global warming is extending the habitats of the mosquitoes due to the increase in humidity levels and their frequent growth in warmer atmosphere. Various diseases due to ebola, hanta and machupo virus are expected due to warmer climates.

MITIGATION AND ADAPTATION TO CLIMATE CHANGE Possibly, there can be two approaches: one is mitigation and second is adaptation to climate change. The IPCC defines mitigation as activities that reduce greenhouse gas emissions, or enhance the capacity of carbon sinks to absorb GHGs from the atmosphere.

Many countries, both developed and developing, are aiming to use cleaner, less polluting technologies. Use of these technologies aids in reduction and could result in substantial reduction in CO2 emissions. Policies include targets for emissions reductions, increased use of renewable energy and increased energy efficiency. Studies indicate substantial potential for future reductions in emissions. Since even in the most optimistic scenario, fossil fuels are going to be used for years to come, mitigation may also involve carbon capture and storage, a process that traps CO2 produced by factories and gas or coal power stations and then stores it, usually underground.

CTET, December 2019 Exam Schedule

The application process for CTET, December 2019 is underway. The last date for submission of on-line application is 18-09-2019, while last date for submission of fee: 23-09-2019 (Before 15:30 Hrs.). A candidate can apply for the Central Teacher Eligibility Test On-line by logging on official website www.ctet.nic.in only. The examination will be held on Saturday, 08-12-2019.

Structure and Content of CTET

All questions in CTET are Multiple Choice Questions (MCQs), with four alternatives out of which one answer is the most appropriate. Each question carries one mark and there is no negative marking. The exam consists of two papers. Paper I is for a person who intends to be a teacher for classes I to V. Paper II will be for a person who intends to be a teacher for classes VI to VIII. A person who intends to be a teacher for both levels (classes I to V and classes VI to VIII) will have to appear in both the papers (Paper I and Paper II).

Secondary level Teachers:

Secondary education begins in class 8th and lasts until class 10th. The schools which impart education up till 10th class are known as Secondary Schools, High Schools, Senior Schools etc. The minimum qualification for secondary education level teachers is Graduation with Bachelor of Education (B.Ed.) or its equivalent; or Four years’ integrated B.Sc., B.Ed. or an equivalent course. An individual having graduation with B.Ed becomes a Trained Graduate Teacher or TGT. A TGT teaches up to class 10th.

Trained Graduate Teacher (TGT) Exam:

This exam conducted by most of the states in India, for the recruitment of graduate teacher in state govt. schools.Candidates from any Graduate in any discipline with B.Ed degree from recognized institutes may apply to TGT exam.

Senior Secondary School Teachers:

Senior Secondary Education in India is of 2 years. There is uniformity on this level of education in terms of duration and classes across the country and all states and UTs follow this 10+2 pattern. Senior Secondary Schools in India include classes 11th to 12th. At this level of education students choose their preferred stream and subjects. They can pursue Arts, Commerce, Science (Mathematics and Biology). The schools which provide education up till 12th class are commonly known as Senior Secondary Schools or Higher Secondary Schools. Some universities and colleges also offer the education of these classes. The minimum qualifications for the senior secondary level teachers include Master's Degree in the relevant subject with Bachelor of Education (B.Ed.) or its equivalent; or Two years’ integrated M.Sc.Ed. course or an equivalent course.If you are a postgraduate (e.g., M.A.) and have done your B.Ed or M.Ed then you become a post graduate teacher, or PGT. A PGT can teach up to class XII.

PGT Post Graduate Teacher Exam

These exams are conducted by most of the states in India, for the recruitment of senior secondary level teacher in state govt. schools.

The PGT exams include questions on General Awareness, Current Affairs, General Science & Indian Constitution, Reasoning, Quantitative Aptitude, Teaching Aptitude, etc.

Adaptation is making changes in lives and lifestyles to beat back the assault. To survive people are striking back-adapting, altering and improvising face the challenges of climate change.

Besides, migration of coastal population, increasing public transport and forestry are the main adaptations that India can opt for.

Increase forested area to 33% of the total geograp-hical area. Deforestation is responsible between 20-25% of global greenhouse gases emissions. It is warned that a third of the State’s bio-diversity would vanish or would be close to extinction by 2030. There is a urgent need for action plan in protecting natural forests at the state and national levels to slow down global warming and to check extinction of forest species. In addition, tree-planting should be on top priority under various schemes viz., afforestation, agro-forestry, social-forestry and farm level plantation as a part of carbon sequestration. Adoption of forest conservation, reforestation, afforestation and sustainable forest management practices can contribute to conservation of bio-diversity, water shed protection, rural employment generation, increased incomes to forest dwellers and carbon sink enhancement.

Increase carbon fixation in the soil by growing deep-rooted crops so as to decrease carbon footprint: deep-rooted crops helps in addition of more biomass in the soil and after decomposition of that root biomass may fix the significant quantity of carbon content in the soil and increase the productivity of soil in an eco-friendly system. Use of modern and efficient technologies in rain-water harvesting, water conservation, judicious use of water and in-situ soil moisture conservation should be popularised to mitigate the effects of drought during summer when prolonged dry spell occurs if pre-monsoon showers fail. Use less fossil fuels as per need and contribute in reduction of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases responsible for global warming. Efficient, fast and reliable public transport systems such as metro-railways can reduce urban congestion, local pollution and greenhouse gas emissions. Use more solar/wind sources of energy: adoption of cost-effective energy-efficient technologies in electricity generation, transmission distribution, and end-use can reduce costs and local pollution in addition to reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. Educate farmers on the dangers of climate change: adoption of participatory approach to forest management, rural energy, irrigation water management and rural development in general can promote sustained development activities and ensure long term green-house gas emission reduction or carbon sink enhancement. Improved understanding of the exposure, sensitivity, adaptability and vulnerability of physical, ecological and social systems to climate change, at regional and local level.

Measures suggested by Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC):

- Implementing effective energy policies and practices to limit emissions.
- Improving existing policies and practices to limit emissions.
- Measures to raise and expand carbon sinks that trap carbon dioxide such as forest management, proper land management etc.
- Pre-planning for the adaptation to climate change consequences in the worst case scenario.
- Revising and implementing current-energy efficiency standards globally to check emissions.
- Promoting environmental education and awareness training in schools and colleges for climate change and associated environmental issues.

More and more people are coming to realise that the magnificent technological advances that have made life so much more comfortable have a dark side as well. As we have seen industrial technology is polluting the environment, and agricultural technology has brought havoc to the biosphere, and military technology has for the first time in history given humanly the means to destroy itself. And even if we do not destroy ourselves directly with nuclear bombs, we may do it indirectly by disrupting ecosystems, food-chains and the whole life-supporting system.

The modern world is just beginning to discover, what a heavy price future generations will have to pay for our thoughtless use of exploitive technology.
