A LIVING & DYNAMIC DOCUMENT

EN Team

Padmabhushan Dr. Subhash C Kashyap, distinguished scholar and well known political scientist, spoke exclusively to Employment News on different aspects of the Indian Constitution which enters its 70th year of existence. According to Dr Kashyap, the Constitution of India is not an inert document but a living, dynamic reality. Emphasizing on the need for every citizen to discharge their fundamental duties diligently, Dr Kashyap strongly propounded the idea of making the study of Constitution compulsory at all levels of formal education in India. He also spoke at length about how the Constitution itself provides remedies for sorting out disagreement in lawmaking and constitutional amendments.

Constitution is not a Mere Document

The Constitution is not merely a lifeless book. It is a dynamic process. It deals with functioning institutions and it comes to have meaning only from how it is operated and by whom it is operated. The citizens are concerned with the Constitution as it affects their lives; as it governs them. While a document is an inert lifeless thing, the Constitution is a living, dynamic reality. It is always developing. The Constitution of India was developing and taking shape even before independence and it continued to be made even after independence in 1947 or even after 26 January 1950.

Abiding by the Constitution is foremost Fundamental Duty of Every Citizen

In the Constitution of India, there are eleven duties mentioned as Fundamental Duties of every citizen. The very first duty of every citizen is to abide by the Constitution and respect its ideals and institutions. But, how many citizens of India, even among the educated, know, firstly that there is a separate part devoted to fundamental duties? We all know about fundamental rights and seek them all the time. But majority of us do not know that there are fundamental duties of citizens also. Secondly, how many of us know the Constitution. If the first fundamental duty of every citizen is to abide by the Constitution; all ordinary citizens should know what the Constitution says. I am pained to say that there is tremendous amount of constitutional illiteracy in our country, even among the educated. I have been pleading for making study of the Constitution a compulsory part of the curriculum right from the school stage to the university stage and in professional colleges, teachers’ training institutes, medical colleges, and engineering colleges, everywhere. Because, if we do not know what are the institutions of the Constitution, what are its ideals, how are we going to respect them. The other fundamental duties include almost all the Indian Independence Act of 1947, however, with the passing of the Indian Independence Act of 1947, the British Government it could no longer express the will of India. Eventually, the British Parliament passed the Indian Independence Act of 1947. The resolution of 1947, which is presently the Central Hall of the Parliament House. On 11th December 1946, Dr Rajendra Prasad was elected as the permanent Chairman of the Constituent Assembly. On 13th December 1946, Jawaharlal Nehru moved the ‘Objective Resolution’, which later became the preamble to the Constitution of India.

Moving the resolution, Nehru said: “The Resolution that I am placing before you is in the nature of a pledge. It has been drafted after mature deliberation and efforts have been made to avoid controversy. A great country is sure to have a lot of controversial issues; but we have tried to avoid controversy as much as possible. The Resolution deals with fundamental rights which are commonly held and have been accepted by the people. I do not think this Resolution contains anything which was outside the limitations laid down by the British Cabinet or anything which may be disagreeable to any Indian, no matter to what party or group he belongs. Unfortunately, our country is full of differences, but no one, except perhaps a few, would dispute the fundamentals which this Resolution lays down. The Resolution states that it is our firm and solemn resolve to have a sovereign Indian republic. We have not mentioned the word ‘Republic’; till this time; but you will well understand that a free India can be nothing but a republic.”

HAPPY REPUBLIC DAY

Raghu Sudheesh

India became an independent nation on 15th of August 1947 but the work on the Constitution of India had begun much earlier. The Cabinet Mission of 1946 consisting of three British Cabinet Ministers – Lord Pethick Lawrence, Sir Stafford Cripps and Mr. Alexander, recommended the setting up of a Constituent Assembly for the purpose of framing a new Constitution. This proposal was accepted and in July 1946, elections to Constituent Assembly took place. Originally the Constituent Assembly had 389 members but it was later reduced to 298, as a separate Constituent Assembly was formed for Pakistan.

Initially, as the Constituent Assembly was brought about by the British Government it could not be called a sovereign body and its powers were limited. However, with the passing of the Indian Independence Act of 1947, the Constituent Assembly became a sovereign body and it was free to frame a Constitution as it pleased. The Indian Independence Act of 1947 also empowered the Constituent Assembly to frame laws for India until the new Constitution came into force.

The Constituent Assembly held its first meeting on 9th December 1946 in the Constitution Hall, which is presently the Central Hall of the Parliament House. On 11th December 1946, Dr Rajendra Prasad was elected as the permanent Chairman of the Constituent Assembly.
There are Many Constitutional Remedies for Contentions in Law-making

If the majority in Parliament goes wrong and takes a decision not in keeping with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, there is a provision of judicial review. One can go to the Supreme Court and if the court finds that the majority has gone wrong and finds that it has taken a decision which violates any principles of justice or any of the basic principles of the Constitution, then they can be declared ultra vires and they can cease to take effect. For everything there are legitimate checks and balances provided by the Constitution. Also, if an act is passed by the Parliament which some people feel has some defects, there is also the remedy of bringing in the houses of Parliament, an amendment. It can be reviewed by the Parliament itself. Any individual member, even a private member, can move an amendment. So far as Constitutional amendments are concerned, the sixth, seventh, 73rd, 74th Constitutional amendments were all referred to Joint Parliamentary Committees and bills as referred to those committees underwent drastic changes at the committees stage. Such committees have the advantage of considering matters in a dispassionate, non-partisan manner, in closed doors, without the intervention of populist pressures and party interests. In the open house, the members have to keep to the party line, but in committees, it is possible to have an atmosphere of give and take and very many committee reports are unanimous. Compromises and adjustments take place in the committees. In several of the important Constitutional amendments, committees made substantial interventions and the bills underwent big changes.

Right to Recall not Possible at Parliamentary Level

The Right to Recall can be implemented at the local levels but not at the national level for several reasons. We have about 250 parties registered with the Election Commission and all are entitled to participate in the elections. Our electoral process, first-past-the-post system of voting is such that people getting minority of votes cast more often get elected because there are numerous opportunities in a constituency and the votes get split between them. The one getting the highest votes is elected. Those highest votes may actually be a minority of votes cast. When you provide for recall, normally, what you say is that a representative does not perform his duties, the electorate can recall him. And for that, procedures vary from 10-15% make a point for recall. Then there is another voting in regard to whether recall should be allowed. And if majority of votes in favour of recall, then the recall process starts. Then there is another voting for the actual recall. There are at least three voting involved. In our system when we know that a person getting, let’s say, only 15 per cent to 20 per cent votes gets elected. So, if a person has to be recalled, we already know that there is a majority vote against him. So, recall can be thought of only with political electoral reform. With first-past-the-post system and with about 2500 parties, recall is not a sensible option. At the local level, the electorate is small. So it may be possible for going for recall procedure, but at the national level where each constituency consists of lacks of voters, I think it is not feasible.

Prof. Sudarshan Iyengar

In June 1905, issue of Indian Opinion he discussed the inoculation issue. Quoting Dr. Turner from Bombay (now Mumbai) he noted that people in Bombay Presidency were reluctant to get inoculated. Dr. Turner and others had suggested various ways in which people could be incentivised or coerced into getting inoculated. Gandhi did not agree with the idea and had argued that it was necessary to bring about an improvement in sanitary habits, morality and economic conditions of the people. He wrote that he believed that Indians committed sin by living in insanitary conditions.

The plague epidemic had seemingly haunted the towns of South Africa repeatedly. In the issue of Indian Opinion of October 14, 1905,35 there appeared an item titled ‘The Bubonic Plague’. It contained educational material meant largely for Indians residing in South Africa then. The article noted that the plague had to stay and it appeared year in and year out as a warning against darkness, filth and overcrowding. The educative part was that it contained clear instructions such as: all the surroundings of dwellings-houses and business premises should be kept perfectly clean; people should get as much light, sun and air as possible; and all suspected cases should be promptly reported to the authorities. He also had a clear advice which stated that ‘every educated Indian had a unique privilege: he could become a missionary in hygiene and sanitation’.

The civic issues continued to bother him and until he stayed in South Africa; he tried relentlessly to orient, educate and train Indians in sanitation and hygiene. In 1912 smallpox broke out in Indian settlements. Some Indians tried to hide the cases. Gandhi was grated heavily by the Evening Chronicle of Johannesburg on various issues bothering Indians including the smallpox. The correspondent wanted to know whether the Europeans needed some special protection from Indians as the community had cases of smallpox and that it was being concealed. The correspondent was perhaps trying to justify the civic authority’s idea to segregate the Indian community’s location from the Whites and others. To this Gandhi admitted that indeed there were some black sheep in the community, but by and large people in the Indian community were cooperative to the authorities in declaring the incidence and following the expert advice. Gandhi argued that, the people had not been cooperative and if they had not helped the public health authorities, the authorities could not have unearthed the smallpox cases. He said that protection to other communities would not come from segregating Indians from others. This was the turning point. Gandhi said, “You will perhaps recollect that, when evidence was being laid before the Insanitary Area Expropriation Commission, medical testimony was given to the effect that any neglect of sanitation that existed among British Indians, or the others, was not to be successfully dealt with by segregating them to inaccessible Bazaars, or to places which would not lend themselves to effective supervision of the public control. The proper method of dealing with the trouble was to effectively enforce sanitation by-laws, and if the by-laws were insufficient, to make them wide enough to cover all kinds of cases.”

Gandhi stayed in South Africa until the end of 1914. More serious issues relating to settlement and citizenship came up against which the famous Satyagraha was born. Sanitation continued to be an issue, but not a prominent one. The ordinance published in the Government Gazette Extraordinary of Transvaal on August 22, 1906 was a Black Act where primary citizen’s rights of Indians were taken back and every Indian was to be reduced to a compulsorily registered immigrant and nothing more. Gandhi thought that it was the result of unalleviated hatred of English towards Indians. He intensely felt that for Indians do or die situation had arrived. The struggle went on and took serious turns. It is history now of Indian people in South Africa as to how they attained status of dignified citizens under Gandhi’s leadership by putting up a non-violent resistance and protest movement called Satyagraha. To conclude on 28th January 1919 and on that day who landed in South Africa, who had the first hand taste of colour prejudice, observed that ‘with great mortification admit the charge partially’. This was an intelligent public admission. It allowed him to work within the community for continuous improvement in the status of personal cleanliness and hygiene. He could also build a strong case against the civic authorities and the governments in their intentional failure in providing decent locations and necessary public health apparatus to the Indian community at large and without which ‘everybody’s business had become nobody’s business’. In the final analysis, he able to convince the colonial authorities and win rights for dignified and decent living. In case of an outbreak of an epidemic Gandhi did not confine to blame game, but plunged into activities of nursing the sick and cleaning and sanitising the areas. Gandhi returned to India in 1919 and continued to make sanitation and hygiene a mission for the country.

8. This ancient land attains its rightful and honoured place in the world and make its full and willing contribution to the promotion of world peace and the welfare of mankind.

The resolution was unanimously adopted by the Constituent Assembly on 22nd of January, 1947. On 29th August 1947, the Constituent Assembly set up a Drafting Committee under the chairmanship of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar to prepare a Draft Constitution of India. The Committee was appointed to scrutinise the draft of the text of the Constitution of India prepared by constitutional Advisor; giving effect to the decisions already taken in the Assembly and including all matters which are ancillary thereto or which have to be provided in such a Constitution, and to submit to the Assembly for consideration the text of the Draft Constitution as revised by the Committee.

The Draft Constitution was published in January 1948 and people of India were given 8 months to discuss the draft and suggest amendments. As many as 7,635 amendments were proposed. As many as 7,035 amendments were originally tabled by members seeking to modify various provisions of the Draft Constitution. Among these 2,473 amendments were actually moved, discussed and disposed of. This alone testifies the democratic exercise that went behind the making of the Constitution of India.

The Constituent Assembly took two years, eleven months and seventy days to complete the task of drafting a Constitution for India. It held eleven sessions covering a total of 165 days. 114 days were spent on the consideration of the Draft Constitution alone. The Constitution of India was adopted by the Constituent Assembly on 26th November 1949. The Constitution of India came into force on 26th January 1950 and on that day the Assembly ceased to exist, transforming itself into the provisional Parliament of India until a new Parliament was constituted in 1952.

Thirty years after the Constitution of India was adopted, the Supreme Court Bar Association in 1979 under the leadership of Dr. L.M. Singhvi decided to celebrate November 26th as Law Day to honour the founding fathers of our Constitution. Senior Advocate and then Supreme Court Bar Association President, M.N. Krishnamani said, “The true purpose of celebrating Law Day is to reiterate ourselves to the following cardinal principles which form the foundation on which this grand constitutional edifice is erected: 1. Rule of law. 2. Independence of the judiciary. 3. Independence of the legal profession. These three principles are intimately interconnected. The main purpose of an independent judiciary and an independent Bar is only to ensure that there is a Rule of Law.

The Supreme Court has been a watchdog of the Constitution of India and has been protecting the Constitution from any kind of attacks over these years. The Constitution of India is turning 70 years old and it still stands tall holding the nation together. It has not only survived these years but also evolved along with the changing times. It continues to be young, energetic and alive.
