BAN ON CHINESE APPS: ROLE AND SCOPE FOR INDIGENOUS MOBILE APPLICATIONS

Saroj Kumar Rath & Jiten Kumar Jain

On 29 June 2020, when India’s Ministry of Telecom and Information Technology banned as many as 59 Chinese apps citing national security concerns, few out of the more than 610 million users of Chinese app Tik Tok in India knew the bitter irony that Tik Tok is ‘not available’ or ‘banned’ in its own country of origin, China. Cumulatively, as per app download estimators ‘Sensor Tower’, the 59 banned apps lost roughly a record 4.9 billion downloads in India since January 2014. Tik Tok, owned by the Chinese firm ByteDance is meant for audience outside China. The Chinese version of Tik Tok available in China is known as Douyin and the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) Government ensures that it must receive every detail of every user who has been downloading Douyin.

India’s giant market, where half of the country’s 1.3 billion citizens have access to internet, has been a gold mine for Chinese companies. However, while Chinese telecommunication companies have been performing profitable economic enterprise in India, ‘some mobile apps available on Android and iOS platforms’ as per Government of India, are ‘stealing and surreptitiously transmitting users’ data in an unauthorized manner to servers which have locations outside India’. Considering the threats posed by such applications to the country’s sovereignty and security, the government zeroed in on creating a digital wall explicitly restricting the entry of adversaries into Indian cyberspace. The newly carved digital wall has ensured that Chinese tech-giants like Alibaba, Tencent, Baidu and Bytedance do not have access to crucial data of Indians.

Significantly, governments worldwide are trying to reclaim the digital space inside their physical boundary. European Union, in recent times, forced Google and Apple to adapt to local rules. China itself carved a digital boundary restricting the access of global cyber players from entering its cyberspace years ago. Google, Facebook and Twitter cannot operate from Chinese cyberspace, which allowed a controlled environment to homegrown players who are flourishing in the local markets and promoted by the Chinese government, they have been going abroad to earn foreign capital. The CCP refused entry of global social media outlets into Chinese territory because as a surveillance state, it is propelled by the desire to keep an eye on the online activities of domestic citizens.

China banned telecast of National Basketball Association’s events since October 2019, when Daryl Morey, the general manager of the Houston Rockets, shared an image on Twitter that showed support for the pro-democracy protesters in Hong Kong. In December 2018, when Meng Wanzhou, the daughter of Huawei’s founder Ren Zhengfei, was arrested in Canada for financial wrongdoing, China retaliated by arresting nearly 100

PERSONALITY DEVELOPMENT STRATEGIES

Vijay Prakash Srivastava

Although all human beings belong to race, personality traits differ from person to person. Some people are talkative while some talk less. Some like to be active while some are lazy. There are people who would always look at the brighter side of things while there are others who find fault with everything. When we describe a person as ‘talkative’, ‘quiet’, ‘active’, ‘lazy’, ‘optimistic’, pessimistic’, etc., we’re talking of an individual’s personality.

Many of us make the mistake of describing personality in just physical terms. Physical features define only outer personality. In the assessment of personality, the inner traits are considered and valued much more.

Personality has been regarded the major determinant of success or failure in life. Thus, by shaping our personality in a desirable manner, we may increase our chances of success. This is as per modern approach. The old belief has been that personality is inherited and difficult to change. Another belief has been that certain personality traits automatically accompany certain physical traits. All such beliefs discourage individuals in trying to bring improvements in their personality.

Before we think of bringing any required and possible improvement to our personality, it is important to understand what exactly is meant by personality. Personality is derived from the Latin word ‘persona’. One definition describes personality as how a person influences others, how we understand and view self and the pattern of inner and outer measurable traits. In simpler terms personality can be described as the personal qualities and characteristics of an individual which makes her different from others. It is our personality which makes us unique and helps us stand apart from the crowd. It is clear that personality cannot be equated with just a few things. It is a package, though in the package one or more things can be dominant than the others. We need to understand the intricacy of its structure and its all pervasive influence on the quality of the individual’s total behaviour, with its motivational aspects.

Personality is dynamic, not static. The same person may react differently in different situations. Though, the changes may not be radical and lasting. Such changes do not represent appearance of new traits. In effect, these are fluctuations in the intensity of traits already present.

In a normal personality, high correlation is seen between different traits or manifest aspects of the personality pattern. This is known as organization for which we may also use the term arrangement. In abnormal personalities, we see more of disorder than organization.

Psychosystem under personality is composed of beliefs,

Canadian including a couple of Canadian diplomats on false charges and stopped the shipments of Canadian canola oil. Not only this, in 2010, when Norwegian Nobel Peace Prize committee awarded the Nobel Peace prize to Liu Xiaoobo, a Chinese dissident, for his long and non-violent struggle for fundamental human rights in China, the CCP government stopped importing Norwegian salmon.

Opportunities for Indian Start-ups

In today's world, internet affiliated services are essential components of life. As per estimation by International Telecommunication Union, as of April 2020, there are 4.57 billion internet users all over the world. Every day 500 million tweets are sent from 320 million users. Facebook has 2.5 billion users while YouTube has two billion active users. In 2018, WhatsApp users alone used to send 65 billion messages per day. The Facebook ‘Like’ button is pressed 1.13 billion times per day. The world is doing every single transaction over the web and social media has been sucking a significant amount of daily time from every citizen.

The banned Chinese apps used to cater to a wide range of needs in the area of telecommunication and social media. Those banned apps used to provide services in the vast expansion of internet browser, file sharing, chatting, shopping, microblogging, video sharing, photo editing, news, games, multiple accounts, mailing, scanning, maps, translation and mobile themes, which are becoming part and parcel of daily life.

Among the 59 apps, TikTok was the most popular ever since its launch in 2017. With an estimated 610 million viewers India accounted for 36% of TikTok’s 2 billion downloads worldwide. In many cases, the massive inflation of social media in daily life of Indians, the blocking of Chinese apps is a godsend opportunity for local start-ups as it allows them the opportunity to cater to the demands, which are already available and users are eager to contribute to the growth story of new companies.

Within 48 hours of TikTok ban, its Indian version Roposo received 22 million new users, notwithstanding complaints about high data usage, low video quality and other issues. Miter and Bola India are other alternative platforms developed by Indian companies.

Users of Indian apps complain generally about bad user interfaces, bad filters, high crashing frequency, high data usage and low video quality. Use of Chinese apps by saying it is so complicated that it requires a tutorial for learning. Low cost of Chinese products and economies of scale has always offered great advantages to Chinese firms.

The Chinese companies since long have been able to provide products at cheaper cost and improve the performance of the product at a competitive price. To take advantage of this void created by banning Chinese apps, Indian developers have to ensure the same quality. This will necessitate collaborations with tech giants.

The NITI Aayog’s flagship Atal Innovation Mission and Prime Minister’s scheme to provide up to 100 loans in 59 minutes under the Medium, Small and Micro Enterprises sector are some of the handholding policies of Government of India, which aims to encourage entrepreneurship in the country.

Innovations in the field of technology and social media in the country need to be encouraged through adequate incentives to the booming talent pool in educational institutions and outside. Industry and institution collaboration may bridge this gap and is the time.

Institutional-Industry Collaboration

Higher education institutions in India can play an instrumental role in connecting IT expertise to the mobile application development. Institutions offering computer applications and IT related courses can collaborate with IT companies in general like TCS, Infosys, HCL, Wipro etc. or organisations exclusively focused towards mobile applications development and offer joint certification of mobile application development courses. This strategy would also enhance employability quotient of technical programmes and availability of skilled and certified manpower for mobile application development.

The institutions can dedicate some of their infrastructural and financial resources for mobile application development. These institutions can also consolidate generation of innovative ideas, designing the related applications and its testing and launch.

These incubators with active collaboration with IT industry and more specifically, mobile application development companies can transform the culture of innovation and entrepreneurship in this dedicated emerging area of mobile applications development. They can also collaborate, a dedicated lab or testing facilities could be developed at the higher education and technical institutions on their utilised physical infrastructure, which could be evolved as nodal points for research and development in the areas of mobile applications. It may also be possible that such higher education and technical institutions collaborate with IT industries for offering custom made certification courses exclusively in mobile application development, which could be combined with their regular UG level technical courses at BE/BBTech/BSc levels. This initiative will have dual benefits i.e. the first being getting certified fresh pass out technical manpower in the exclusive domain of mobile applications and secondly, enhancing the employability quotient of technical courses with tremendous potential for campus placements.

India has tremendous potential with a robust pool of young talent and promising infrastructure for higher technical education. If these factors are combined with collaborative framework, it would soon become possible for India to come up with a plethora of quality oriented indigenous mobile applications which will cover the entire domain of our lives and more specifically for socio-cultural and educational connectivity.

PERSONALITY DEVELOPMENT...

situations which are not exactly to her liking.

 Desire for domination: A person with desire for domination wants others to accept her/his views than listening to others' points and evaluating them.

 Need for achievement: This shows a person's desire to accomplish more in life in the areas chosen by her/him.

 Introversion and Extroversion: Introverted people are quiet and keep limited contacts. In contrast, extroverts love to talk and meet new people.

 Conservative and Dynamic: People with conservative approach don't like to change and are happy with routine, repetitive jobs. Dynamism makes people to seek change and explore new things.

 Locus of control: The term may sound new for some. Locus of control considers the tendency of people to believe that control resides internally within them, or externally, with others or situations.

 Determinants of Personality

 Heredity: Heredity, as we all know, is the biological transmission of physical and mental characteristics by parents to their children. Such transmission happens through genes. A person generally inherits physical features like height, body type, colour of skin, hair and eyes etc. Capacity as well as willingness to learn and respond are also passed on to children to some extent.

 Social and Environmental factors: We're greatly influenced by how we're brought up in the family, how we're educated and how our peer group, friends and classmates interact with us. Our parents have a great influence on us and home is considered to be the first school for a child. We learn basic manners and acquire certain habits from our parents. Other members of family, elders, brothert's and sister's also contribute in shaping our personality. After family, comes the role of teachers and teaching methods. A more participative teaching method opens up. We also have to take into account the influence of our peer group. At different stages in life, we have different peer group with whom we spend much of our time and are affected in different ways. For this reason, we are advised to choose our friends wisely.

 Situational factors: It is said that people who have struggled in life are usually stronger. How a person appears outwardly and how he/she behaves in a particular situation may surprise us. An aggressive person may fail miserably in a critical situation whereas a calm and quiet person may handle it well. Situations elicit our real self and by keenly observing situations, we learn a lot. While facing difficult situations we build our confidence and gain prepared for bigger challenges in life. Situations can be used to learn life lessons and strengthen our personality.

 So, there are multiple influences on our personality. Can these influences be leveraged to bring desired changes in our personality or can we minimize the effects of negative influence, is a million dollar question. The idea of personality development has been brought to answer such questions. Development means entering a better situation. Development is assessed both in qualitative and quantitative terms. Personality development signifies shaping our personality to become balanced and adaptive, better tuned to realize our goals.

 It is very easy for us to remain what we are and concede that we're not required to change. This may satisfy us for the time being. There is no restriction in choosing this option and in fact many people find this option more comforting except the ones who look to the advantages of personality development and the opportunities associated with it.

 We should realize that when we are grown up, everywhere we are judged by our personality. For jobs, in addition to use of other selection tools like written/computer test, there is a personality test. At work place, in society, the respect, the support we get from our colleagues, team members and neighbours, depends on our personality.

 Every one of us should try to become better than what we are. A transformation is not easy but we can bring small, incremental changes which over a period of time may change us significantly, for better. If we are keen on personality development, we should have the belief that bringing such change is possible and we can own a better personality than we already have. Given below is a step by step approach for those who want to bring positive improvements in their personality.

 Change in self-concept:

 Self-concept is how one sees herself. Everyone has this self-concept, though some people think of it more than others. The need here is to be realistic about what we're and what we're not. If you consider yourself wronged, helpless and pitiable then it is the time for reality check. A negative self-concept is not going to help you. Instead make a resolve that you'll do everything to become better and come out of the negative, but you're already in one. There are both controllable and uncontrollable factors. At least we should look at what is within our control and change it, wherever required.

 Objective and unbiased evaluation: Note down traits of your personality which are not desirable or which may come in your way of success. For example, we may be unnecessarily argumentative or highly egotistical and disliked for these. Here you have to be a bit hard on yourself to come out with an objective assessment if we have to solve a problem first we should accept there is one, then understand its nature and take steps to deal with. Also it is very simple to realize that if our personality has a flaw, the onus is on us to correct it.

 Seeking feedback: Ask the people you trust to give you honest feedback on your personality and areas of improvement. Respect the feedback even if you do not agree with it.

 Reformative actions: A little bit of self-control, determination and discipline may create wonders. There are different ways to avoid situations of improper response by yourself, on case to case basis. Don't try to work on all the issues in one go. Take a few steps at a time. Be sincere and honest in your efforts.

 Set limits: Do not allow indefinite time to improve yourself. There should be some time frame and realistic ones. Frankly, for qualitative improvements you don't need so much of the time. It is more a matter of self-control, check and how soon you want to accomplish it.

 Review: You need to review your progress in your personality development and improvement mission. Maintaining a journal and reflecting over it may be of immense help.

 Personality development is not only overcoming your flaws. You also have to add or grow traits which will make you a better person, more acceptable and closer to your goals.

 How personality development helps

 The advantages of personality development are many. It grooms an individual and helps her/him to create a mark of her/himself. It makes a person realistic, helping her/him accept situations and face them with courage. By developing our personality we become mature in our thinking, thus reducing the chances of stress and conflicts. As a better person we make the world better.

US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo has announced visa restrictions for a certain group of Chinese officials under the Reciprocal Access to Tibet Act. He said, China has continued systematically to obstruct travel to the Tibetan Autonomous Region (TAR) and other Tibetan areas by US diplomats and other officials, journalists, and tourists while Chinese officials and other citizens enjoy greater access to the United States. Mr. Pompeo announced visa restrictions on Chinese government and Chinese Communist Party officials involved in the formulation and execution of policies related to access for foreigners to Tibetan areas. He said access to Tibetan areas is increasingly vital to regional stability, given the Chinese human rights abuses there, as well as Beijing’s failure to prevent environmental degradation near the headwaters of Asia’s major rivers. Mr. Pompeo said the US will continue to work to advance the sustainable economic development, environmental conservation and humanitarian conditions of Tibetan communities in China and abroad.
