CHOOSING THE RIGHT INTERNSHIPS

Debolina Saha Narayan and Shubhaankar Ray

Internships have become the buzz word for students exploring the job market. With still competition and strain on available opportunities, especially in the given backdrop of the continuing COVID-19 pandemic, internships have become an important learning platform for students coming from different educational backgrounds to showcase the breadth of practical understanding that they have of their chosen area of interest.

One would have thought that the pandemic would lower the number of students pursuing internship opportunities. On the contrary, there has been a surge in remote internships and students keen to equip themselves with as many internships as possible. It is in the backdrop of increased participation of students in available internships, it is pertinent to outline the points prospective internship applicants should keep in mind when selecting internship opportunities and ways in which they can utilize such opportunities to increase their chances of securing an employment. Internship Bank is one such platform which provides internship opportunities to upskilling female professionals from lesser known colleges, humble backgrounds.

The Dilemma Surrounding Choice in Internships

It is important that students choose their internships carefully and in line with a well-thought out clear long-term strategy that allows them to showcase their best qualities. Internships should provide students with ample opportunity to firm up their strengths and in the process help students standout among their peers, at the time of recruitment.

Therefore when deciding which internship to opt for, students should ask themselves two questions. Firstly, whether after successful completion of the chosen internship, are they likely to get another good internship? and secondly whether the chosen internship opportunity will help them in building their key skills which they would ultimately need at their first job?

The process of choosing internships can be varied depending on individual experiences and skill-set of a student.

The learning should begin during the application process itself and valuable lessons learnt in being resilient to failures and honing other soft skills gained while pursuing an internship application, will undoubtedly come to good use when the candidate later looks for a job.

Also, interns should not only aim to build their technical skills during internships, in fact they should place equal attention to building lasting relationships with their peers and seniors who will end up becoming mentors.

The internship period should be embraced as an opportunity to go beyond normal networking formalities and instead be used to build meaningful relationships. Only then will one

CIVIL SERVICES MAINS EXAM: NEED FOR A ROBUST STRATEGY

S.B. Singh

On the nature of Civil Services exam, one can safely say that while preliminary exam only entitles one to be considered for writing the main exam, the main exam decides both success and rank in the final count. Since bulk of marks are accounted for by the mains papers, it is bound to be this way. Taking a cue, while optional paper carries 500 marks, the four GS papers taken together carry 1000 marks. Then, the essay paper is allotted 250 marks. Thus, the total marks allotted to mains exam is 1750. Personaly test, commonly called Civil Services interview, carries 275 marks. This makes the main exam the deciding factor in the success of a candidate. Unfortunately, many candidates fail to appreciate the fact and opt for based, premeditated preparations, a trend set by the coaching shops by promoting the so called test series which runs into dozens of numbers.

This diverts energy as aspirants struggle with so many unnecessary facts at the cost of mains preparations. It must be clearly understood that prelims, being just a qualifying exam, only requires students to secure the cut off marks. The focus should be on mains preparations. While preparing for the mains, one is also preparing for the prelims, because both are interconnected.

Basic skills required for mains:

1. Cognitive Skills: These skills are necessary for acquisition of knowledge and use of information in order to make sense of reading books and other sources. Without this skill, the readings will be rendered useless.

2. Linguistic Skills: It means having good command over language in terms of grammar, vocabulary and structure of sentences. Your cognitive skills can be put to use only by your linguistic skills.

3. Normative Skills: It is setting of norms or standards to evaluate an issue. There will be many areas in the UPSC mains syllabus where such norms will be applicable. For example, in the essay paper, you need to apply some norms while writing on a philosophical or social topic. In the ethics paper, normative skills will have to be applied on many questions.

4. Nature of the mains GS papers:

   I. Multi-disciplinary syllabus: Each mains GS paper consists of many disciplines. Paper I combines history, art and culture, geography and social issues. Paper II includes policy, governance, international relations and issues of social justice. Paper III is a combination of economy, disaster management, national security and science and technology. Paper IV is on ethics but in this paper also, there are topics from ethics, social psychology (e.g. attitude and emotional intelligence), and governance (e.g. citizen charter, utilisation of public funds).

   II. Dynamic syllabus: The mains GS syllabus is dynamic in two senses. One, it is very contemporary and takes up most recent happenings. Two, it mostly Current Affairs based. The static portions are confined to history, geography, art and culture only rest are all current affairs based.

   III. Unconventional questions: By this, it implied that only few questions can be answered from textbooks. Majority of them can be attempted only by close observation of events unfolding on a daily, basis.

   IV. Import of knowledge: UPSC itself has notified that no marks will be given for superficial, irrelevant answers. It means that answers to each question must successful internship provides a strong stepping stone to the next internship opportunity and ultimately land first generation professional students with little or no connections, their dream job.

Students who decide on which internships to opt for on the basis of their personal ambitions, individual personality and personal geographical and financial circumstances fare better than those who simply apply for an internship without any thought.

Making the Decision on Internships

Personal ambition

Some students, while in their first year of college already decide on the organization they would like to work for when they graduate. Needless to say such students would do well to concentrate on choosing internships that would allow them to build their curriculum vitae that showcases the skill-sets and credentials to their ultimate hiring manager. This in turn would mean that the students would do good to choose subjects and undertake extra-curricular activities that the hiring manager of their chosen organization would be interested in. For example, if a law student is sure that she wants to pursue an opportunity in commercial law then she should do what is her interest is corporate law, she would do well if her academic papers, co-curricular activities including participation in relevant moot court competitions. It is important that students show a consistent interest in their area of interest and have an impressive list of achievements and more probability of getting the desired internship or job opportunity.

Also, these students who are keen to join a particular organization after their graduation can try following the 'backward approach'. For example, if a student would want to work at organization A, the student would need to visit the website of organization A and study the job requirements section to understand the requirements and the packages they offer and choose a job that suits their interests. Once the student is familiar with the specific job requirements of organization A, he can start working towards building those skill-sets during her undergraduate days by opting for subjects and extra-curricular activities that would improve these skills. Such students should carefully build their curriculum vitae containing relevant skill-sets for organization A would immediately attract the attention of the hiring manager and set her apart from other candidates.

The other helpful strategy would be to create a LinkedIn profile and start looking up profiles of people working at places where a student aspires to work. Visiting and following profiles of individuals already hired by the organization that the student aspires to join, will give an insight into what is required of the student to join the particular organization. Besides for any specific queries, the student always stands to get the best possible tailored advice, most relevant and up-to-date response when such queries are directed to the student's LinkedIn contacts who already work in the organization that the student aspires to join. However, as usual students must be mindful of not asking too many and answering them, as well as asking broad questions. Students are most likely to receive a response from busy well-established professionals, if the questions asked are specific and show a well-thought-out query. It is important to remember that some students are requesting help that she has already doned all necessary homework on the subject.

Students are unsure on what course of action they should take after graduation. should engage and communicate with seniors and professionals in the field that the student aspires to engage in. It is important to learn from the mistakes of seniors and professionals and also understand what initiatives and strategies worked for them. Every new individual that the student approaches with the same query, is most likely to give a new perspective from their own personal experience.

It is important that throughout the internship application process, students remain cheerful, motivated and keep away from any negative energy and strongly believe that their perseverance will pay off. Besides, it is also crucial that students learn not to worry or focus on the things that could go wrong. Even if the internship does not pay out as per the initial plan of the student, it can provide helpful lesson to the student on the areas or type of organizations that the student would want to avoid in the future.

Students should take advantage of all internships to the greatest extent possible and use internships to discover the types of work that excite them as well as understand the nature of work that they would want to avoid. It is equally as important that students learn to grow and expand their comfort zone with each internship opportunity and pick on new skill-sets that would make them more attractive to future employers.

Students should treat their internships as "mini jobs". This outlook would require students to think of their internships as more than a simple entry into their curriculum vitae to increase their chances for securing a job. If students dream of becoming entrepreneurs or professionally dressing in a particular manner of their dream job, it is important then that students do things at their internships itself. Good practices developed during internship days will become admirable habits when the students join their first job and this in turn would help such students distinguish themselves as outstanding professionals.

Furthermore, it is important that students always apply the "step-up" principle. By this we mean that interns would do good to emulate a good associate and try and conduct themselves in a similar fashion. The quicker the intern develops the good habits of his mentor, the more likely will the intern be offered a job or another internship opportunity. However one should not become rude and arrogant when trying to "step-up" and is important to not lose and humbleness. More often than not, interns will only be a person in the manner the person projects herself to. Thus if the intern starts projecting the same confidence and work ethic and discipline of a good associate she is more likely to offer a pre-placement offer.

Individual Personality

It is important that interns and students play to their strengths and accordingly choose their internship opportunities. If a student is an extrovert who loves public speaking and engaging with people then a career in marketing may be good option for such person. Similarly if a student does not enjoy working for 17-18 hours a week as an intern the counseling could be a good option. Likewise, students good in research would do well to pursue a career with a thrust.

Students should simultaneously work on improving their weaknesses and slowly turning their weaknesses into strengths.

Briefly put a student's success at her internship place would highly depend on how well the student has matched the internship requirements with her strengths.

Individual Circumstances

When selecting their internships, students should also pay attention to their individual, geographical and financial circumstances. Whether or not students should opt for internships abroad would highly depend on whether their institution and financial circumstances permit such a commitment. It is important that students take stock of all these circumstances when they take a call to go for foreign internships. Students should refrain from choosing brand name of an organization over quality of work if exposure abroad good quality work is compromised.

The location of the organization will be good enough to fill this lacuna. Often, at smaller companies or firms due to lack of helping hands intern are handled over more responsibilities than they would have been in larger organizations that are well-staffed. It is important that students take a step back and clearly understand that if unsure to talk about the exact nature of the work that they undertake during their internship and present their understanding of the various issues at hand in the relevant subject area at the time of their first job interview. Brand names of various organizations will not take them far.

Furthermore, if students are located at a geographical location that is remote and far away from their desired place of internship, they may consider opting for a remote internship. Remote internship is a good idea but is only effective if students have earlier interned at the organization in person. This is so because in person internships help develop soft skills and build connections in a deeper manner than remote internships. Thus when a student has already built such a connection with team-mates of an organization, remote internships later would prove to be a good option.

Practical Tips

There are many qualities that internship providers seek in interns. However the two most sought after skills are:

- (i) technical qualifications (i.e. knowledge in subject matter of the area chosen for internship); and
- (ii) soft-skills (i.e. manner in which the interns conduct themselves as members of a team as well as with external clients).

While internship providers can easily test a candidate's technical skills in both, in-person as well as remote internships, soft skills of a candidate is best evaluated in person internships where interns have greater amount of face-to-face interaction with their team-mates as well as with external clients. Excellent interns are those who can demonstrate both these skills at their internship stint. Both of these skill-sets are equally important much against the common perception that technical skills are more important than soft skills.

An intern greatly increases the chance of receiving a pre-placement offer by having a clear understanding of the internship provider's expectations of the intern. An applicant can play a pivotal role in directing an internship provider to choose him/her over many other candidates.

Ingredients of an application

Cover letter: including a brief cover letter that clearly lays down the qualities of the prospective intern which are relevant to the internship requirement. A tailored cover letter goes a long way in drawing attention of an internship provider to an intern's profile. For example, if the internship application requests certain qualities in a candidate than prospective interns would do well to re-read these qualities and in their cover letter demonstrate how they successfully being each of those qualities on board.

Well formatted and detailed curriculum vitae: interns would do well to remember that a curriculum vitae is the first point of contact that an internship provider would assess and make call on. What matters is that the intern is personally going to be. Also, interns should understand that a curriculum vitae simply does not list out the technical details of a candidate. Curriculum vitae's show to an internship provider, a candidate's eye for detail, skills in organization and presentation of thoughts in limited space and efficiency in using computer programs to make the curriculum vitae more visually pleasing. Potential interns are also advised to personalise their curriculum vitae for eachorganization.

CIVIL SERVICES MAINS EXAM ...

... reflects a candidate’s mature understanding of the issue. Just relying on commercialized market materials can lead to low marks as they are often compiled materials and most of them furnish similar information. Instead, one must read from standard sources. For example, the current international order is in a chaotic flux. To understand it, one may read a recent book by Shashi Tharoor titled: “A New World Disorder.” On such topical issues, available market materials are poor substitutes for original readings.

Thus, a true understanding of the nature of the mains exam will lead to better performance. Just following the syllabus mechanically, a routinized way is bound to result in poor performance.

How to cover the mains syllabus: Since the syllabus is only indicative, one needs to strategize its scope by breaking it into various components. The best way to do this is to look at last seven years’ questions and locate the areas from where questions are framed. It must be noted that some areas, questions are asked regularly.

FACTS TO BE PRESENTED:
1. Bipan Chandra: India’s struggle for independence
2. Bipan Chandra: India since independence
3. R.C. Prachar: Raj to Swaraj
4. A.R. Desai: social background of Indian nationalism
5. A.L. Battacharjee: The wonder that was India
6. Geozzard of India: Art and Culture, volume II
7. P.M. Gokhale: Indian Constitution
8. Granville Austin: Constitution of India
9. M.P. Singh: Indian Federalism
10. Mira and Puru: Indian Economy

Economist Survey
Vijay Joshi: The long road to development
Geography: all NCERT books on Geography
Ganesh Leong: certificate Geography
Ethics
2. Power Singer: Ethics
3. Power Singer: Ethics in real life
5. ARC II report on 64 ethics in governance

Social issues
1. Vinita Pandey: Indian Society and Culture
2. The lists are indicative only

For areas like disaster management, internal security, science and technology, it is better to rely on current periods of the topics, as no books covering the exact syllabus are available. (The author is a Merchant and Accountant, email sb.singh2943@yahoo.com)
