CAREER IN MARKET RESEARCH

Nidhi Prasad
The market research industry in India has witnessed a vast transformation in the recent past and is predicted to keep transforming as we walk on the path of globalization and digitalization. This is the best career for those who want to make innovations that alter existing perceptions. It is a fantastic base for a business career as graduates can experience a wide range of sectors. Once you cut your teeth in it, your options are potentially limitless.

What is Market Research?

Market research is a marketing technique that collects information about consumers and their choices, usually through surveys, analysis and interprets the information before providing it to clients to help in decision making. It is the process of determining the viability of a new service or product through research conducted directly with potential customers. Market research allows a company to discover the target market and get opinions and other feedback from consumers about their interest in the product or service. If Unilever wants to launch a new shampoo, they need to first decide on who will buy the shampoo, is the target consumer, a man or a woman? Should it be a dry or a liquid shampoo? What fragrance should it have? What type of hair will it suit? These and other such questions will need to be asked to help the company take important decisions regarding the new product. Detailed data is required to be collected before planning a campaign in order to explore possible markets for a product or service. This is what market research is all about.

Today, we live in a consumer-driven world, and the businesses have to face a cut-throat competition to survive and succeed in the market. A company cannot succeed without understanding the consumer's needs and behavior and hence it relies on intensive backend market research. Almost any successful sales or business is based on extensive market research. In simple terms market research is what businesses call their attempt to learn more about their target customers. This is the process of discovering and understanding the characteristics of people who will buy the product.

Market Research can be carried in two ways:

Quantitative research, which is gathered through surveys and questionnaires. Here, the researcher focuses on coming up with numbers, example: what percentage of the population buys a particular product.

Qualitative research, gets behind the facts and figure to find how people feel about a particular product. Researchers take interview, use questionnaires and interpret the result.

Eligibility Criteria

Market research analysts have a bachelor’s degree in any of the following: marketing, statistics, computer science, math, social sciences, business administration or communications. Certifications are voluntary but strongly recommended, as they help demonstrate professional competency. The Marketing Research Association provides training and certification to those who qualify.

Market Research Certification Courses

- Certified Research Analyst (CRA)
- Certificate in Market and Social Research Practice
- Professional Researcher Certification (PRC)
- Graduate Certificate in Marketing Analytics and Market Research
- Post Graduate Certificate Program in Market Research and Data Analytics

Market research executives are normally MBAs with a specialization in marketing, while those holding data interpretation would need to be postgraduates in sociology, psychology, anthropology, social work and related fields. Those going into field work would need a general degree, although economics, psychology, statistics, geography or the social sciences are preferred along with strong communication skills. A good area for college students who get hands-on experience for a possible career in market research. With a statistics or computer background you could enter the data analysis area.

One way to check if you have what it takes, is to get yourself a summer, internship handling fieldwork in a market research organisation. If you like your work, it could really pave the way for a successful career in a widening expanding field.

Career Opportunities in Market Research

Today, market information is required in practically every kind of organisation: Market research is the most essential tool for this purpose. Government departments too have realized the importance of getting information on the public opinion on a range of issues and have often used the services of market research organisations. Political parties use market research to conduct opinion polls and find out voting patterns. Social and economic research also uses market research companies to collect data. Television channels use market research to find out the popularity of programmes shown on television through television rating points (TRPs).

While most multinational and marketing organisations, governments departments and research institutes handle some in-house market research operations, there is a need for research agencies that specialize in providing this service. Most agencies have specialized in the kind of research services they handle, with a huge data bank of information. Some advertising agencies have also set up their own special departments in market research.

Market research analysts are the backbone of all crucial business strategies. They have to plan, pose, analyze, understand and improve the sales of a firm. Analysts have to study the statistical data of past sales and predict the future sales of the service or product. They have to research the products, prices and marketing strategies used by the competitors.

The analysts also tell the company about the risks and rewards of introducing a new product line or expanding into new territory.

The following are some major sectors that depend on constant market research for their growth:

- Automotive
- Education and Training
- Finance, Investment, and Insurance
- FMCG including Food Drink and Household Products
- Government and Local Authority
- Healthcare and Medical
- Leisure and Tourism
- Media and Public Relations
- Property and Housing
- Public Services and Utilities
- Retail and Wholesale Market

Market Research professionals can work in the following profiles depending upon their interests, expertise and skills:

Research Director: This is the most senior position in Market Research and takes the responsibility for developing and delivering all the market research related projects on time.

Research Manager: Research Managers are responsible for designing, implementing and managing the respective research projects. They make sure that the research project is running flawlessly and for that matter liaise with the operational director. They act as a bridge between the company and its clients.

Research Executive: A Research Executive is involved in the initial development of projects and also works with the operational department of the firm. The executive comes to work with the research manager and research analyst to develop the layout of research design and data collection. They are also involved in the preparation of the final research report.

Statistician/ Data Processing Professional: They mainly focus on one or many core areas of data processing, which includes scripting of surveys, data processing tabulation, statistical sampling and market modeling.

Research Analyst: They look after the work of data analysis and data presentation. In addition, they also play an important role in testing the quality of questionnaire routing.

SCIENCE FOR SELF-RELIANT INDIA AND GLOBAL WELFARE

Narendra Modi gave a clarion call for self-reliant India, because that was the time when we were struggling to have our face masks, PPE, face coverings, medicines, ventilators etc. So we picked up from there, that this time our theme should be Atmanirbhar Bharat - Self reliant India & Global Welfare. Then we had 13 new events in it. In one of the Mann Ki Baat program of the Prime Minister, he spoke about Indian toilets and its potential. Taking cue from it this time we had a session on Toilets and Games and it was an overwhelming success. A new section on AgriTech was also introduced with a view to boost India’s self-reliance in seed production where we are currently lagging. Also in pharmaceuticals, we export to the entire world. ISIF provided a platform for taking forward the concept of Atmanirbhar Bharat and reduce import.

Since time immemorial, India had always promoted the philosophy of - Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam meaning the whole world is one family. How science a science play a role is taking forward this philosophy?

Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam and the concept of global harmony is our philosophy for many centuries. I wish to mention here Achariya J.C. Bose. Our readers would be knowing about his work on radio waves. The modern day mobile uses that technology. He could not have foreseen that technology. He didn’t know that he wouldn’t be able to do what he had planned because that science is for all. If a country makes Covid vaccine and restricts it to only domestic use, it would mean that science is not for masses. If you remember in March this year there was a shortage of Hydroxychloroquine which at that time was touted as a magic drug for covid. India is known as the pharmacy of the world and it supplied Hydroxychloroquine to more than 50 countries including the US and this exactly is our philosophy. Science cannot be done in silos. Whatever is the outcome, it has to be shared with the larger humanity.

This year due to the corona virus pandemic ISIF was held virtually. What kind of challenges did it pose?

ISIF is a big congregation of people to celebrate science in Indian culture, people come and enjoy festivals in large numbers. But because of social distancing norms it is not possible to do it offline. Therefore, it was decided to go online. Initially, we were apprehensive about going for webinars, zoom meetings etc but the festivity would be lost. We wanted people to come on to a common platform. Whether it is a student or a researcher, a professor, diplomat, artist, everyone can meet and see what everyone comes to the same platform. The challenge was to create a robust platform for scientific knowledge exchange at the same time retaining the festivity.

How was the response in this edition of ISIF?

The response was indeed overwhelming. More than, one lakh twenty thousand unique participants registered for the events and more than five lakh people participated in four days. The icing on the cake was that Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi inaugurated the festival and the valedictory address was by the Vice President Shri M. Venkaiah Naidu which was really encouraging and inspiring.

Dr. Aravali you are heading National Institute of Science Communication and Information Resources as the Director. What exactly is the mandate of NISCAIR?

NISCAIR has 38 laboratories pan India and we are working on the entire spectrum of subjects. This particular Institute of CSIR has a mandate to integrate science with the society. We focus on science communication and information resources. Whatever science is happening around the globe, our responsibility is to communicate it to the masses. So much of funding is going into science, so we are accountable to the society. The question is does the common man know what is happening? NISCAIR is a nodal organisation to communicate science in a lucid language to the common man.

Are you also targeting school children, the general public to inculcate the scientific temper and spirit of inquiry?

It is our endeavour to inculcate the spirit of inquiry in children. Even our Constitution talks about it. We must encourage our children to ask questions. We have a program named JYOGA which means curiosity in Hindi, wherein students from Kendriya Vidyalayas are invited to visit CSIR laboratories and NISCAIR and interact with scientists and visit the entire campus. We also publish a series of booklets in English for children in Hindi, and Urdu at a very nominal cost. During lockdown these magazines were made available online totally free of cost.

We also try to provide formal linkage among the scientific fraternity. Do you also come out with scientific journals?

In the scientific world, it is very important to communicate your research paper or article or patent so that the whole scientific community comes to know what is going around. When we talk of Atmanirbhar Bharat, scientific publication is another domain where we need to become self-reliant. NISCAIR is publishing scientific journals for a long time. We are publishing 18 scientific journals across disciplines at the moment. The journals have wide reach not only in India but across the world.

Dr. Aravali you are also heading the National Institute of Science Technology and Development Studies (NISTADS). What is the Institute all about?

What is your vision? It does not serve the society, it is of no use. Mahatma Gandhi also emphasised this. NISTADS is basically a bridge, it helps to bring forward the knowledge technology developed in CSIR laboratories. Society needs new technology but adequate awareness is not there. We are also collaborating with Uttar Pradesh and developing and enhancing our tools of science and technology to rural areas. NISTADS basically talks to scientists what society needs and tells society what all has been developed by the scientists.

Often we see that the linkage is missing when it comes to commercial production of any new technology or innovation. What should one do to bridge the gap?

I feel, of late, the linkage is being established. I believe that working in isolation could be one reason why commercial linkage is missing most of the times. Scientists have a different goal and business have a different objective. Both need to be integrated. We now have in our research organisations and also the emphasis on Start-Ups would lead to enhanced interface between scientists and the industry. I believe, CSIR and NISCAIR helps in technology transfer and hand holding during the initial period.

Whatever mankind is today is all due to progress in science and technology rapidly. I perceive that in the next 20-30 years science will not only be there for development but also for the environment and giving back to mother earth. Science and technology should be available to all, it should be inclusive. Science should bridge the gap between the haves and the have nots, people on the fringes in the 21st century. It will be for the welfare of the mankind.
