SCoPE: ACCOMPLISHING NATION’S SCIENTIFIC SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Dr. Nakul Parashar

February 28 is celebrated as National Science Day with great enthusiasm in the country. We all remember this day when the Nobel laureate, Sir CV Raman announced the discovery of the Raman Effect, which eventually led him to win the prestigious Nobel Award in 1930. All over the country, celebrations take place at a number of places but the question still remains – is the common man aware of it? This is still a big void and that too in a period when we claim to have gotten the media & entertainment in the hands of a common man. Through smartphones, and other hand-held devices, we notice people watching movies, dramas, news, and other items on the move but what about science & technology? Is science & technology so dry and dull that explaining it to the masses is a Herculean task? What is thus, scientific social responsibility and the new science & technology innovation policies with regard to science communication? Is it not Science?

Special Feature on National Science Day on February 28

Communication, Popularization, and Its Extension (SCoPE)?

It’s indeed a matter of great pride for all of us that the country is dotted with a number of educational and research institutions of eminence and due importance in the area of science & technology. With the advent of newer technologies, latest inventions, and discoveries, the number of such organizations is on a growth path. Yet, information about how many of these discoveries, inventions, and technologies reach the common man is a big question.

In today’s world where internet connectivity is available to almost everyone, questioning information dissemination seems to be quite strange. Isn’t it? We hear telling each other – just google it and you’ll find it. Well, that’s correct but it’s reactive, and not a proactive approach. This means that if I were to know about a fact or an event, I would google it and thus, search for it. On the contrary, I would hardly go all the way to read it on my own. This infers that general interest in knowing the intricacies of the wonderful world of science & technology is too little. In fact, we all claim that the world of science & technology is so interesting and intriguing. We are heard saying that if we start delving deeper into it, we’ll come across the facts and figures that would baffle the common reader, or the viewer, based upon the media he or she is linked with. However, the reality is quite different. The fact is that the general audience considers science & technology related programs to be dry and dull. This is because most of the science programs

HOW TO PURSUE A CAREER IN THE EXCISE DEPARTMENT

Staff Selection Commission (SSC) through its Combined Graduate Level (CGL) Examination held every year recruits candidates in Excise Inspector posts. The examination is held once a year, generally in the month of April. The last date for the submission of application is usually the last week of December. The examination is three fold consisting prelims and mains written examination along with personal interview round of the candidates.

The candidates need to pass the prelims examination with adequate cut off marks in order to scale up to the mains written examination which is way tougher and critical than the prelims examination.

Upon clearing the mains written examination the candidates would have to undergo personal interview round. The candidates would be finally selected based on their marks attained in the mains examination and personal interview round conducted by the concerned recruitment authority.

Upon successful selection in the mains written examination by scoring the cut off marks the candidates are called for personal interview round. In the personal interview round the candidates are tested mentally by the recruitment authority.

Upon clearing this final hurdle successfully the candidates could get posted as Excise Inspector under the CBIC. The Excise Inspector can rise up in the rank and end up becoming Excise Commissioner as time passes.

for radio, television, social media, and print media are presented in the country in a very routine manner. This makes the content presentation uninteresting, which in turn, coerces the programs to lose its relation with the common masses. With this, the purpose of inculcating interest in science & technology in the common man is lost as well. The cascading effect of a citizen losing interest in science and technology results in the mindset of a nation's inclination towards building a scientific temperament. The spirit of inquiry in the minds of the country's citizens is of paramount interest. To further develop that interest and passion within the citizens of the country, science communicators, authors, and extension workers have to develop and design a number of real-time outreach strategies and overcome a number of challenges. These challenges, if perceived objectively, open up a plethora of opportunities in the domain of science communication, popularization, and its extension (SCoPE).

SCoPE is a fast-coming interdisciplinary domain of science & technology. It has a special mention in the new STIP (Science & Technology Innovation Policy) under the topic Science Communication and Public Engagement. Special emphasis is given to science communication capacity building and research. Under this topic, creative and cross-disciplinary platforms of science & technology communication will be promoted including the design and knowledge transfer between researchers, science communicators, and the public. Additionally, community-centric programmes and regional science centres will be encouraged to promote science communication in regional languages with local and hyper-local contexts for the last-mile connectivity. This salient point would include development and communication of accessible, constantly updated, and searchable databases of science communication-related resources and opportunities.

Science communication and public engagement outreach or extension of activities is yet another topic of relevance. SCoPE in the new STIP, it is in line with the national policy on Scientific Social Responsibility (SSR 2020), where scientists and researchers will be motivated and incentivized to promote science communication and public engagement activities. Institutions and organizations will be encouraged to earmark a percentage of the allocated budget (SSR fund) for science communication and public engagement activities.

Under the new STIP, special emphasis has been laid on mainstreaming science communication. Every public-funded institution and the department will have a dedicated wing/centre for science communication and public engagement in STI-related activities. Science Media Centres will be established at national and regional levels as an interface between media persons, scientists, and science communicators. The aim is to mainstream media to increase its coverage of scientific topics.

With a fast convergence of new media types like print, electronic, social, and digital media, SCoPE has created a niche for itself. In print media after a slump in science & technology-related news, we see that there is a gradual increase in the number of news/stories appearing in the daily, weeklies, and monthlies. There are a number of factors that can be accredited to it. In the year 2020, the COVID-19 period, knowledge to understand what COVID-19 became one of the most sought after and a very natural search on the Internet. This curiosity to know more science, scientific literature, and developments happening around were obviously amongst the biggest searches. For those who had limited connectivity to the internet, print & the electronic medium was the only resort for the people to quench their thirst to understand in detail about the virus. Besides, a surge has been noticed in the numbers and frequency of science & technology-related news being published in the print media. Pandals infer that there have been a number of science & technology-related events that have happened in the country in close succession, which have caught the attention of the general public. Meanwhile, the style of stories related to science & technology that have emerged recently, are far more written in a simple and easily understandable manner. May be the authors of these articles have understood the pulse of their readership. Thus, their style of expression is such that science & technology are far more reader-friendly than what their predecessors wrote. Thanks to a number of government & non-government organizations that have been working in this area of SCoPE for past many-many years now. They’ve noticed and observed how important it is to train and develop science students, researchers, teachers, and journalists to write popular science articles. In addition to this, these organizations like Vignay Prasair, Indian Science News Association, NOSTIC, etc. also extend their experience and knowledge to a number of colleges to facilitate access to mass communication to include SCoPE as a part of their curriculum. One can thus notice that despite COVID-19, a number of training workshops, seminars, and webinars have happened over a period of two years. As a result, the quality of articles has improved. The number of contributors to the development of popular science for the common man has also increased. Thus, the year has thus, truly, opened a number of opportunities in the form of science desks at a number of print newspapers all over the country. We can thus, foresee a surge in job opportunities as science reporters and writers for daily and periodicals. Vignay Prasair, an autonomous organization of the Department of Science & Technology with the Government of India has been continuously organizing science & technology training workshops. In order to attend to the need of the field, the SCoPE mandate of Vignay Prasair and many similar organizations requires a number of science communication centers on the ground, which could then further develop a new team of SCoPE executives on the train-the-trainer model. Vignay Prasair also embarked upon a program to provide ready-made duly tailored news terms to the dailies in various languages through online & print media. The Department of Science & Technology News of India. Consequently, with this interest of a general reader in science & technology related print news & stories has increased manifold and will continue to grow in the future.

There are a number of efforts being made by a number of organizations across the country. In this, it is worth mentioning that the Department of Science & Technology, through Vignay Prasair, has been successfully conducting an annual program called AWSAR (Articulating Writing Skills in Augmenting Research), where research scholars at PHD and Postdoctoral levels are encouraged to write about their research program in simpler words to make a common man understand it.

This is one of the prominent examples of scientific social responsibility.

With the advent of newer technologies in the domain of media and entertainment, the trend of news media has shifted, and interestingly this trend change continues to grow as we speak. From cable to direct-to-home (DTH) to over-the-top (OTT), the visual media is now the new medium. Visual stories, films, documentaries, and almost every genre of what we have seen on television has shifted to internet-based content thereby making everything available online. The traditional OTT for that matter is currently riding the wave, as we can observe people on the move can watch programs of their choice at any point in time. With OTT gaining a lot of popularity, why would SCoPE stay behind? In this direction, Vignay Prasair launched IndiaScience, (http://indiascience.in/) India’s first OTT channel dedicated to science & technology about two years ago and already around 2000 films catering to the needs of various segments of society.

The scope of SCoPE is thus, humongous and a lot can be written about it. To serve the society and accomplish the goal of SCoPE, it is very important to worth referring to the Article 51A (n) of the Constitution relating to Fundamental Duties of citizen. It shall be the duty of every citizen of India to develop scientific temper, more than, and the spirit of inquiry and reform.
